Original Poetry.

For the Examiner.

To a Mother on the Death of a Child.

Oh! mourn not his loss,
For, though beauteous and bright,
The sweet budding boy
Was but lent, and not given;
Death saw, and in pity,
E'en canker could blight,
In triumph conveyed him
To blossom in Heaven.

Oh! mourn not his loss,
For his spirit is free
From the troubles of earth,
From its sorrow and care;
Rejoice! he hath heard
The dark fields of the tomb,
To dwell nigh the Godhead,
With spirits so fair.

Then in humble submission
Bend lowly the knee,
In meek adoration
Submit to the rod,
All radiant in beauty
And fadeless in bloom,
He waits thee with smiles,
At the throne of thy God.

Miscellaneous.

A FORTUNATE MISTAKE.

It was on the evening of the 2nd of May, in 186—, that I went to hear the Princess Strainervoyce, who at that time attracted the fashionable world to her concerts. I went to hear the Princess partly to kill time, and partly from a desire to see and hear for myself the marvellous foreigner whose name was on everybody's mouth. When I reached Her Majesty's concert-room it was crowded to its utmost capacity. It was so closely wedged that one could have studied anatomy, after a fashion, merely from the impression of one's neighbor's bones. At the close of the concert I was borne along with the crowd and jumped through the doorway at the risk of breaking every rib in my body. Ere I could escape from the throng, and while I was shrugging my shoulders to ensure myself that my collar bone was in its proper position, I felt a hand clasping my arm, and a musical voice exclaimed, "You good for nothing! I thought I lost you! What a frightful crush! I do believe my arm is broken and my dress ruined, and all for the sake of hearing this Strainervoyce! I would not give our Clara Novello for a world of Strainervoyces!" I was on the point of replying that I agreed with her, but restrained myself, laughing inwardly at the novel position in which I was placed and wondering who my fair companion could be. Evidently, she mistook me for her brother, or possibly, her husband, judging from the familiarity of her manner, for she added, in a sympathising tone, 'Poor Ralph, you must be quite exhausted! Never mind, dear, I'll get you a cab directly.'

'Pardon me, madam,' said I 'but—'

'Oh, nonsense, Ralph' she interrupted me. 'You have become half barbarian since you went to the Crimea, to permit me to scat myself, while you stand there as if I were your wife and you ten years married, instead of your sister, whose ready assistant and attendant—in place of a blotter—you should be.'

'Excuse me,' said I, but—'

'Ralph, I shall catch my death of cold sitting here; and such a long ride to it! Here, the lady gave a perceptible shiver. 'Do jump in and sit down or I will—'

What she would have done I did not hear; but, taking my place beside her in the brougham we were driven off, whither I knew not where.

'I won't ask you to talk to me with that headache, but I want you to listen to me,' began my companion, the moment we started. 'I wanted to talk to you coming in, but that little chatterbox, Maggie, prevented me from saying a word to you. You remember poor Lucy Walters, Ralph. Her mother died about two months ago, and the poor girl has gone to live with the Deans. Mr. and Mrs. Dean have been very kind to her, but it is impossible for them to do more than shelter her. How any one can be so cruel to such a darling is a mystery to me, and yet every one that presents itself to insult that woman in commencing upon the girl's father's actions, as if she could have prevented that which occurred twenty years ago, and I have seen Sarah Ware insulting her with regardless of poor Lucy's tears.'

I could not restrain an exclamation of disgust at this.

'I knew it would disgust you, Ralph,' continued my companion. 'Well, the doctor says now that Lucy will always be home—there can be nothing done for her. I have been thinking, upon since her mother died, that if she had a good teacher she might not only in time be independent, but achieve a name as an artist. You should see some of her attempts. She is a genius, Ralph. But that would require money, and where is the money to come from? You know I haven't much, Ralph, but I have determined to do something for our old play mate. I can save out of my allowance at least thirty pounds, and each if you will double it, either will find me debt Lucy! I can commence it up the other day, and if I am correct it will enable her to attend the School of Design and take private lessons in art for a year; and, at the end of that time, if Lucy is worth, she will show the world what a woman can do. When I look at the poor girl, with her rare talent and her carving for knowledge, I cannot help thinking how superior she is to us—more than I and Policeman think that if like that and my place and I have, there would be some justice in the distribution of the world's goods and estates. Don't my Pa chip and contribute, Ralph. I know you will give your share towards their support, like a good brother as you are. I have been talking to her about it, and I

[illegible] I'm coming it as it is [illegible] only have a rather rambling [illegible] Ralph.'

Here my companion's chatter came to a full stop, and there stands Carrie, bless her!' said my companion, as she stepped up the steps while I stood irresolutely beside the brougham.

'Then my dear fellow,' I suddenly ejaculated, 'it is time you were off.' And acting myself in the brougham, once more I was again driven off, but whither I knew not. I only knew that I had been a deserting companion, whose lips a moment since were pressed against my own, and whom, in all probability, I might never meet again. And when I recalled her generous offer, her sympathy for the poor lonely girl and her self-sacrificing spirit, so unlike that of my acquaintance in general. I longed to kiss her for it. Then, again, my cheeks tingled when I remembered the deception I had practised. And what would she think of me when she ascertained—as she most certainly would—sooner or later—the truth?

My speculations were, however, cut short by the abrupt stoppage of the brougham, whereupon I stepped out leisurely, picking up from the bottom of the carriage as I did so an exquisitely embroidered handkerchief. Upon looking at it closely I perceived the initials 'C. W.' in one of the corners. I was reminded of my situation at that moment by the driver's inquiring 'If Mr. Ralph would want him any more to-night?' I merely shook my head, and without vouchsafing a word of explanation I turned into the well lighted house-wards.

Evidently I bore a strong resemblance to Mr. Ralph, whoever he was. When his own sister and the servant were deceived by the resemblance it must certainly be very great. True, my cap was drawn down firmly, almost concealing my eyes, and the lower part of my face was muffled up in a heavy shawl; still, taking everything into consideration, I said, to myself, the similarity of dress, feature and manner must be wonderful, thus to deceive one's relatives.

It was a late spring, and the frosts in May cut off most of the fruit near London. The night was in that transitionary state termed 'chilping,' and remembering that a walk of four miles lay between me and the Abbey, I walked forward briskly, revolving in my mind the different expedients of my adventure, as they presented themselves, one after another, and resolving to keep my own counsel. I had walked perhaps a mile, when I observed a gentleman approaching at a quick as rapid pace as one. As he drew nearer, I was struck with his resemblance to me—height, size, manner of dress, even to the wrap around his neck, and the buttons upon his coat were the exact counterpart of my own. I think the resemblance must have struck him at the same time, for, as we were passing each other we involuntarily paused, and scanning each other closely and curiously, thus ejaculated, 'Mon Ralph,' I said to myself, as I turned to look at him. Singularly enough, Mr. Ralph was at that moment looking at me, but the instant he was detected, he glanced around and resumed his walk. Now I remember my chambers. I resolved to ascertain, if it was possible, who the person was who dwelt in the large house on the Common, and who had arrived from the Crimea so recently, that I might thereby secure myself to whom I was indebted for the delicious kiss, and other acquaintance I was likely to be making.

Early upon the following morning, I sat down and wrote a few lines to Miss Lucy Walters, the lame girl, and inclosing three sovereigns notes, sealed the letter, and dey pausing it in my pocket, called forth in quest of the information I so much desired. Wending my way to a friend's chambers, I encountered a young articled clerk, who was at that moment entering the door.

'George,' said I, affecting a careless manner, 'I wish to ask you a question;' and I then inquired if he was acquainted with the neighborhood in which Mr. Ralph has on the previous evening.

'Yes, sir, very well,' he replied.

'Can you tell me who lives in the large house with the two eagles on the gate posts, on the left-hand side of the Common?' The house which took from the road?'

'Oh, you mean Mr. Wrightson's—that is more than four miles and a half,' said he.

'About four miles and a half, was he mused.'

'Thank you. That is all I want,' I replied, as I opened my note-book, where I addressed my note to Miss Lucy Walters, care of Miss C. Wright; then, mastering my self-gravity, I added the following:

'By the way, George, will I, I have a letter to deliver out there. Do you think you could do it for me? If you would call a cab—any way, that you could get there soon; and when you deliver it, don't say a syllable. I don't want Ralph having the discredit.'

He was a shrewd lad, and, as he intended to read, I knew, by the expression of his face, that he guessed my motive.

'You don't want them to know where it came from, I suppose?' said the boy.

'You understand me,' I said.

'Well, I have message to for you, Mr. Clark,' said the lad. 'My mother Dean bids me say that.'

'Is Mr. Dean your uncle?' I inquired, hastily.

'Yes, sir,' he replied.

'There is a lame girl living with him?' I continued.

'Yes, Miss Walters,' he replied.

'Can I trust you, George?' I inquired.

'You may, sir, if you want to help Miss Walters without her knowing where it came from,' said he.

'Well,' said I, 'this letter is intended for Miss Walters, as you will perceive. All the money inside, and if you can contrive it to be—'

'That is all that is required. You will keep the matter to yourself?' I added, as I endeavored to place a sovereign in his hand.

'No, sir; not that, Mr. Clark. I only wish I could do twice as much for Miss Walters,' continued the lad fellow. 'I shall put the letter where she will get it, and she will never know—where it came from. I can bring change to-night.'

'Very well, George,' I replied, as I left him, feeling satisfied that the matter was in safe hands.

'That lady in blue?' said my cousin.

'No,' said I, 'the lady beside her.'

'Have you not made her acquaintance? That is Miss Wright.'

'Any relation to Miss Emma Wright?'

'No; they are quite intimate, however. Let me present you.

I fancied Miss Wright bestowed a look of more than ordinary curiosity upon me as my cousin pronounced me; but I—I did the self-same to meet her inquiring look as if unconscious of the fact that I had met those eyes before, and had received from those lips a sister's kiss. As I seated myself beside her, I overheard the words:

'Taking everything into consideration, I think very little blame can be attached to the gentleman,' uttered in a merry tone by a person who was at my elbow, but whose face was turned from me.

'Pray, have done, Ralph!' said Miss Wright, as she tapped his shoulder lightly with her fan, a faint blush suffusing her cheeks.

'But the curious of the whole proceeding,' continued the party, addressed as Ralph, heedless of her remonstrance. 'The fellow even gave her a brotherly kiss.'

'Ralph!' exclaimed Miss Wright, energetically, as the blood mounted to her forehead, dyeing her face and neck crimson.

'Come, come, Wright, don't ask us to believe that!' exclaimed one of the group.

'Well, she cannot deny having complained to me the same day that she was exceedingly stupid—thinking I was the offender all the while—and scarcely uttered a word; that, in fact, she had to do all the talking.'

'We will take that with considerable allowance, too,' replied one of the listeners.

'I met the fellow on the road,' resumed the gentleman; 'and I must say I never encountered a man so like myself in all my life.'

'In truth, you are a curiosity, Mr. Wright, to call such things about your sister,' exclaimed our hostess, with a merry laugh.

'As if did not own last even as much!' said the young man. 'Ever since that evening she has been teasing me in every conceivable way imaginable, and round suddenly towards her; and, in doing so, encountered my steady gaze, she rejoiced, with a perceptible start, upon seeing me.'

'There he is!'

Miss Wright flashed a meaning glance upon him, then suddenly, towards me, as if to observe the effect his exclamation and manner would produce upon me; but I was equal to the emergency and maintained an unruffled

'I did not hear the first of that, Miss Wright,' said I, cast a careless glance over the wondering group, and another of pretended astonishment upon Mr. Wright, who evidently felt no little annoyance.

'Perhaps it is just as well,' was the reply, as she glanced at her brother. 'Ralph really is unmerciful when he begins. I am glad you did not hear the whole; but now that it is out I may as well give a correct version of the affair. Like an attentive brother, he permitted the crowd to separate at the close of the Princess Strainervoyce's concert on Tuesday, and I was so unfortunate as to mistake a stranger for him, who accompanied me home without making the discovery till error. Thinking that it was Ralph, and that his headache prevented him from talking, I had placed my tongue to perform rather more than a fair share.'

'Then all the blame must be laid upon Mr. Wright. He should be the last to mention it. His want of proper feeling in very much to be deprecated; but I do hope that he will attempt for the future, could even hasten—I think about the exhibition signs of repentance.'

'And here you see who the gentleman was, Miss Wright?' I inquired.

'Hush, hush! you rogue, I forgive you on the spot,' she said, and then addressing the gentlemen.

'Does she deserve that much?' I inquired.

'I think I have known that her mistake would detect me.'

'Ah, you rogue, you have betrayed yourself!' she exclaimed, with a merry laugh.

'Well, I must confess that I was guilty of a little deception, but I am sure you will forgive me when I tell you that I was not aware of the mistake you had made, until you had left the house.'

'Then you knew it when you kissed me?' she said, with a look of surprise.

'I did,' I replied, 'and

THE undersigned has been instructed to sell by Public Auction, on Wednesday the 14th day of April, 1864, the whole of that desirable and very valuable property known as the

BEAVER MEAD FARM,

Containing in all about 440 acres.

That portion of property set off for farming purposes contains 247 acres, divided into equal parts having each a frontage upon the Keene Road. On one of these lots stands the residence of the late Judge Hall, a large and commodious Cottage, an extensive and well-built stone Barn and Stables, fitted up in the best manner, together with an excellent young Orchard just beginning to bear, and a good Garden. The Meadow covers an area of about 50 acres, equally divided upon the two lots, and produces an abundant crop of very fine hay.

Upon the other lot there are no buildings; it has about 40 acres cleared, and 25 or 30 acres of Beaver Meadow, the remainder under wood.

The Farm is in good order, productive, and within one mile of the Town of Peterborough.

There is also a very excellent mill site, most conveniently situated for milling and manufacturing purposes, with about 5 or 6 acres of land attached.

The remainder of the property is now being surveyed into lots varying in size from one to ten acres, and will be sold either at private sale or Public Auction, in lots to suit purchasers.

Miscellaneous.

A curious work on egyptian, recently published, strongly condemns rouge and pearl powder, but informs the ladies how they may give color to their cheeks without danger. Take a teaspoonful of bright scarlet cloth, put it in sixty gallons of wine and rub it over the cheeks till a moderate tint appears. This infallible detection and is harmless.

In a private letter to the editor of the Washington Republican, from the army, the writer tells a story of one of the farmers in the neighborhood of Culpepper, whose property was destroyed by both armies having forraged. The old chap one day, while surveying ruefully the remains in the meadow where his fences once stood, remarked with much feeling: "I hain't much to complain of this yer rebellion, but I'll be dog garned if both sides hain't took me."

Bill the Irishman to a telegraph operator: "Do you ever charge anybody for the address in a message?" "No," replied the operator. "And do you charge for signing his name, eh?" said the enthusiast. "No, sir." "Well, then, will ye please send this? I just want my brother to know I am here," handing the following:—"To John Finn—at New York—(Signed—Patrick McFinn." It was sent as a tribute to Patrick's shrewdness.

A Chicago girl, tired of waiting for the young man who don't 'propose'—probably on account of the expense, or the proper dearness of gloves, the eyes broke out in the following advertisement, which appeared in the 'wants' column of the Chicago Tribune as follows:—"This is leap year. I'll wait no longer. So here I am, 21 years of age, prepossessing appearance, handsome, educated, good dancer, large sparkling eyes, long black flowing hair, and as full of fun as a chestnut is full of meat, desires to make some man happy. Address, Miss ——, Depot, Chicago."

An Heroic Old Man.—We find many stories told at the expense of 'old maids,' but the following is decidedly in favour of that much persecuted class of unfortunates:—At the time—some half a century ago—when Great Britain was threatened by France from Hogsdale great preparations were made in the yeomanry in every part of the kingdom. A person, called, on an ancient Scotch maiden, resident thereon in years, to solicit a subscription to aid in organizing and clothing a corps of young men to act in defence of their country, was effectually 'dried up by the antiquated lassie's indignant reply:—"Indeed, sir, I'll do nae sick thing. I never could raise a man for anybody save my own, an' I'll no raise men for King George."

An Efficient Tax Gatherer.—In one of our neighboring towns the lads of a school, complained the habit of smoking, and resorted to the most ingenious methods to conceal the vice from the master.

In this they were successful, until one [illegible] the master [illegible] them at it, [illegible] "How dare you be smoking?"

"Sir," said the boy, "I am subject to headaches, and a pipe eases off the pain."

"And you! and you! and you!" inquired the pedagogue, [illegible] they in his turn.

One had a "raging tooth;" another "chills;" the third a "cough;" in short, they all had something.

"Now sirrah," bellowed the master to the last boy, "what disorder do you smoke for?"

"Sir, I smoke for cents!"

The master looked at him for a moment in silence, and then walked home.

Trouble of an Artist.—A Vermont artist grew an ounce of his superfluous [illegible]. One day a [illegible] was taken and examined a picture, asking at the same time, "What's the [illegible]?" "The M.," replied the photographer; "I took views of his cranium some time since, and they are said to be very accurate." "I reckon they are. Now," said he, "the one, if I recollect right is several million of miles away from here; isn't it?" "Yes," replied the photographer. "Well, you took that one I want; just give me a good picture of my head, [illegible] I want for it." "Certainly," was the reply. "Where shall I send it?" asked the daguerreotypist. "Why, let's see, I get [illegible] Saturday night, I'll be home," said the artist; "you must be a blockhead, you can't [illegible] take a likeness of the one hundred millions miles off; and you can't get your money of brother Sam, [illegible] Yes sir, [illegible] Yes sir, [illegible] of daguerre, and left the [illegible] in an very pleasant mood for the next visitor.

ATTENTION is directed to the rate of premiums adopted by this Company, which will compare favorably with that of any other institution in Canada. Investments of Company's funds to the large amount of nearly five hundred thousand dollars have been completed in Canada; and as all Scotch institutions are finally disposed of in the Province, the Scottish Provincial offers all the facilities presented by a purely local Company, while it possesses the additional advantage of a large capital, and an influential and responsible body of shareholders in Great Britain.

If anything goes astray by fair play within one year from the time of purchase, I bind myself to re-place it; so you cannot be deceived.* Now, any one who is in need of a Pump would do well to get one of my Water-drawers at once. N. H. DOWN'S

VEGETABLE BALSAMIC

ELIXIR.

A CERTIFICATE

WORTH A MILLION.

An Old Physician's Testimony.

READ!

Waterbury, Vt., Nov. 24th, 1856.

Although I do not like the practice of Physicians recommending indiscriminately, the patent medicines of the day; yet after a trial of ten years, I am free to admit that there is one medicine before the public that any Physician can use in his practice, and recommend to the public with perfect confidence; that medicine is Rev. N. H. Down's Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

I have used myself with the very best success, and now, whenever I am troubled with a Cough or Cold, I invariably use it. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are suffering from a Cold or a Cough, for Croup, Whooping Cough, and all diseases tending to consumption, and to the Profession as a reliable article.

I am satisfied of its excellence beyond a doubt, having conversed personally with the Rev. N. H. Down, about it. He informed me of the principal ingredients of which the Elixir is composed, all of which are purely Vegetable and perfectly safe.

J. B. Woodward, M.D.

Now Brigade Surgeon U. S. Army.

This old, time-tried, standard remedy still maintains its popularity When all others have proved insufficient, the Elixir alone continues to give satisfaction.—Use it for

COUGHS, COLDS, CATARRH, ASTHMA, CROUP,

Incipient Consumption and all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs.

Thirty years ago the Elixir first made its appearance; and even then, in its primitive and imperfect state, produced such extraordinary results that it became, at once, a general favourite. Many have tested it, what it really is, a Family Medicine.

For as more than half the Chemists to which Sash is heir, originate from colds, so this may be considered a general preventive of all diseases, by removing the primeval cause.

Should at all times keep this Valuable Family Physician at hand; and by its timely use save hundreds of dollars that would otherwise be swallowed up in discharging doctor's bills.

TANNER'S GERMAN OINTMENT!

Over Hours to whom Known by Sight.

TANNER'S GERMAN OINTMENT is the only one that ever was used in North America and the United States, and is universally known by many thousands in this country to be the best remedy for Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Chilblains, Sore Eyes, Ringworm, Scald Head, &c. We have letters from Physicians in all parts of the country, testifying to the wonderful cures it has performed in their practice, and from persons in all parts of the country, whose names we are permitted to use.

(From a Minister.)

Dr. Tanner,
Dear Sir,

Your German Ointment has cured my daughter of a most severe case of Scrofula, in a very short space of time. I have used many remedies for the disease, but your Ointment is the only one that has done her any good. I have also used it in my family with the most beneficial results, and can recommend it to the public as a good remedy for the diseases named.

Yours very truly,

Rev. Henry W. Ryan.

Gold Water, Mich., Sept. 14, 1863.

If a person has had the disease for any length of time, and has used many remedies without success, he may rest assured that Tanner's German Ointment will cure him. It is an old remedy, and has been used in all parts of the country for many years. It is not a quack medicine, but is prepared by a regular physician, who has had many years experience in the treatment of skin diseases. It is an external remedy, and is applied directly to the part affected. It is perfectly harmless, and may be used by the most delicate female or child. It is the cheapest medicine in the world, as a few boxes will cure the most obstinate case. Be sure and get the genuine. Every box has the name of the proprietor, Dr. Tanner, blown in the glass. Price 50 cents per box. Sold by druggists everywhere.

Dr. Tanner,
Dear Sir,

I am in the employ of [illegible] and have had the [illegible] for the past [illegible] years. I have been troubled with the disease, and have used many remedies without success, until I used your German Ointment. I have used it in my family with the most beneficial results, and can recommend it to the public as a good remedy for the diseases named.

Yours very truly,

Stanwood, N. Y. Rev. Thomas Webster.

July 21st, 1863.

Dr. Tanner,
Dear Sir,

I have used your German Ointment for the disease and find it the best remedy I ever used.

Respectfully yours,

Canaan, N. Y. Rev. Mr. Rankin.

Nov. 12th, 1863.

Dr. Tanner,
Dear Sir,

I have used your German Ointment for chilblains, and I think it the best remedy in use for that complaint.

Yours truly, etc.,

Rev. G. Coon.

Gold Water, Mich., Oct. 9th, 1863.

Why is it that Doctors discourage the use of many good remedies? Is it because they are worthless? Simply because it is their interest to do so. It is nothing else.

Select Poetry.

NELLIE COOKING.

"When, do you love me most, sweah?"
Says Nellie, my wife, to me,
Patting my face with her dimpled hand,
As she sat on her place on my knee;

When I bid you good-bye at morn,
Following you to the door,
Standing on tiptoe to meet your kiss—
Your kiss that is oftener four?

"When at nightfall I watch for you,
Pressing my face to the pane,
As I sit on the cushioned window-ledge,
Hoping it may not rain?
"When I am sitting alone at home.
My sewing pinned to my knee,
Working for you through all the day,
And humming it o'er like a bee?

"When I am dressed to visit our friends?
Or pressed to sing in a crowd?"
Patting my face with her dimpled hand—
"When of me are you proud?"

"Not kissing, or watching, or sewing for me,
Singing, or dressed for a crowd,
Not, most of all, are the times for me,
Nellie, my wife, to be proud.

"But when, coming home, so tired, at night,
Famishing for my tea,
To find you, Nellie, my bonnie wife,
Busy at cooking for me."

"Out on you for a selfish lout!"
Says Nellie, my wife, to me,
Taking away her dimpled hands,
And slipping down from my knee.

"Hold a moment, my little queen!
Come back to your seat on my knee;
Listen! for such a terrible pout
Will ruin your mouth for me.

"When I find you busy at night,
Flushed with working for me,
Willing to soil your dainty hands
With boiling the kettle for tea.

"I am sure that Nellie, my bonnie wife,
Is truly the wife for me;
Is able to help me with all her might,
If trouble should come to me:

"Is able to work as well as to sing,
If ever the need might be.
Now kiss me, Nellie, my bonnie wife,
Then come and pour out my tea."

Miscellaneous.

IS HE STINGY?

Wife.—Edward Garrett is as good a man as lives; kind to me; kind to the children; a little absent, perhaps; reads books and papers when he should be talking; still, a good man. But then, he is so stingy.

Uncle Ludovic. Stingy! why, you and your children, and all, seem quite comfortable.

Wife.—If we do, thanks to my clipping, darning, and cheese-paring. Why, there isn't a rag or an old bone lost in this house.

Uncle.—I'm glad to hear of it.

Wife.—So you may, for extravagance is a fearful thing; but then you know there is a medium. It is one thing to be a miser, and another thing to be a spendthrift. Now, Edward is miserly, and I've told him so more than once.

Uncle.—And what does he say?

Wife.—He stares at me, shaking his head, or groans. Just look here, Uncle. What is the use of money; is it not to live on? We can't take money to the grave with us; we must have the comforts of life; we must be neighborly; we must have a house of the same kind as other people's; we must dress, give parties, eat, drink, have summer lodgings, and educate our children as other people do. Nay, don't sneer, Uncle; you know I am speaking good sense.

Uncle.—You are doing nothing of the sort!

Wife.—Well, you need'nt look so ill-natured. You men say that we women can't argue.

Uncle.—Neither you can.

Wife.—So you say.

Uncle.—Well, Maria, my dear, let us try if you can conduct an argument. What is the proposition that you are about to defend?

Wife.—This simple, clear one, that people must live like their neighbours.

Quod ultra denied.

Wife.—Is that law, or Latin, or what?

Uncle.—It is both, and common sense into the bargain. Listen to me, niece of mine. To live like your neighbours involves two things: primo, that they are living as they should do; and secundo, assuming that to be the case, that they can afford to live as they do.

Wife.—Those now was the Hamiltons' christening; what an elegant turn-out, and how happy everybody was!

Uncle.—Bah!

Wife.—Bah! Uncle, do you deny that plate, dishes, decorations, everything, was not of the best? and that everybody was so pleased?

Uncle.—Of course I don't. Pray, do you recollect when that party took place?

Wife.—Yes, I think I do. You remember there were pine-apples at the dessert. It was just after Joice was weaned, poor dear! It must have been this time last year; but why do you ask?

Uncle.—For a reason which I would not tell you, unless you were a silly wife. That dinner was supplied by a purveyor, and to my certain knowledge is not yet paid. The plate and crystal were hired from him, and all are still mortgaged for.

Wife.—Vile calumny! There's the supper and ball party at Thornton's last week; I suppose you'll be asserting that it——"

Uncle.—In regard to it, Maria, I shall assert nothing, except that Mr. Kitto, the baker, told me the other day that Thornton did not pay him for his marriage outfit for a number of years, which I shall not quote, in case that you might think Kitto or myself insane.

Wife.—Scandal!

Uncle.—Be it so. The more paying of accounts by the Hamiltons' or the Thorntons' does'nt affect my argument. Granted that they can afford pine-apple deserts, and other things in keeping, it doesn't follow that you can.

Wife.—Uncle, Mr. Garrett has a good business.

Uncle.—I hope so.

Wife.—Hope so! You don't mean to hint, gracious me, that there is anything going wrong?

Uncle.—Not I. On the contrary, I think that he has a good rising business, poor fellow!

Wife.—Why should he be so niggardly then?

Uncle.—Have you any notion what he makes by his business?

Wife.—Well, oh, to be sure, I can't exactly say that I do know; but I recollect, when he proposed, he spoke about £600 a year, and I am sure, uncle, there's nothing to be seen here to that tune.

Uncle.—In business, Maria, £500 may be in the books, but £400 only may be available. What is your house rent?

Wife.—Eighty pounds.

Uncle.—Well, let us take the slate:—

Rent and taxes	£100
Food, four adults and three children.	120
Clothing	80
Education, medicine, summer lodgings, extras, etc.	150
	£450

There's £450 without anything special for Garrett, and I know that he pays £30 a year for life assurance.

Wife. I did'nt think of that; but it appears to me that Edward looks too much to the future, and does not sufficiently attend to the present.

Uncle.—Maria, your safety lies in that. Your husband is what is called a professional man, and, consequently, if he should be taken from you, he leaves you nothing but a few book debts, the furniture of this house, and his life assurance. Did it ever occur to you what would be your position in the world if Garrett were suddenly cut off?

Wife.—Never uncle,—that is, seriously.

Uncle.—Well, listen. Supposing he were to die this night.

Wife.—Uncle you frighten me.

Uncle.—Life is at all times a serious thing; death is still more so; and we would all be wiser to think oftener about the responsibilities of both. I repeat, therefore, supposing Garrett to die to-night, your whole estate would stand something in this way—

His Accounts	£50
His Life Assurance	£1000
His Furniture	£400
	£1450
Deduct rent, taxes, household accounts, funeral expenses	£250
	£1200

Twelve hundred pounds would be all that you would have in the world, and what could you do with it? Investing it in the best way possible, all you could make of it would be £60 a year.

Wife.—Nonsense!

Uncle.—Sober truth.

Wife.—Why, I should starve.

Uncle.—Not exactly. Do you know that I have seen widows left with nothing?

Wife.—Not positively nothing.

Uncle.—Well, next to it; that is, they had simply their furniture left.

Wife.—What in all the earth did they do?

Uncle.—Why, the friend helped and that friend helped; and they kept lodgers; and they sewed; and this boy got into an office, and that boy went to sea; and this girl would become a companion, and t'other a governess, and so on. And I have seen widows shedding tears of joy, that every one of their children turned out so well.

Wife.—My children are not old enough for me to be thinking about their conduct.

Uncle.—It is one of the things in life that will yet cause you joy or sorrow. The Duke of Wellington once asked a friend, who, on that day, was the happiest man in England. The friend replied that he could not tell. It is Dr. Wordsworth, replied his Grace, whose three sons have carried off the three highest University honours. At a railway station the other day, I overheard an labourer say to another that he had reared five sons and five daughters to full age, and that none of them had ever caused him a red face. This was a great consolation for poverty. Don't suppose, therefor, that all is lost when riches fly away.

Wife.—And yet you want me to save money?

Uncle.—Certainly; live within your income, whatever it is. Avoid poverty if you can; but have philosophy to meet it, if it should overtake you in spite of yourself.

Wife.—Life seems a tangled web.

Uncle.—As a wife and mother you will find that more and more every day. Don't lightly conclude that your husband is stingy. Watch, pray that you enter not into the temptation of spending foolishly or unnecessarily that which might lighten the lot of your possible orphan children. Good morning! JAMES KNOX.

MISERIES IN LIFE.

Passing a narrow passage fresh painted.

Endeavoring to make violent love under the table, and pressing the wrong foot.

Hearing the bells ring for the marriage of your rival.

Drying a long letter, by holding it negligently to the fire, as you converse with a friend; turning round and beholding it all in flames.

Forced by politeness to leave a comfortable party for the purpose of accompanying a cross old maid to her lodgings two miles distant.

Dreaming that you have suddenly acquired a large fortune; stretching out your hand to grasp the welcome booty, awakening, and finding nothing in your fist but the bed-post.

THE LATE REGISTRAR OF BRUCE.

FURTHER DEVELOPMENTS.

(From the Bruce Review.)

Mr. Hammond's account against the government, published in the Globe, and reprinted in our issue of last week, has excited a feeling of intense disgust in the minds of all classes of the community.—Even those who, at first, were inclined to sympathize with him in his removal, struck dumb with the revelations which have since come to light, are now fully satisfied with the righteousness of his dismissal.

Mr. Hammond, it appears, did not confine his peculations to the deputy-returning officers. He charged the Government thirty dollars for the hustings, but the contractor who erected them indignantly denies being paid that sum, and says he only received fourteen dollars and fifty cents—of course taking back the lumber after the declaration of the poll. We understand he has made affidavit to that effect, and forwarded it to the Government. Whatever excuse Mr. Hammond may have continued to trump up for his peculation with the deputies, he can offer no palliation for his fraud in this case. He is clearly convicted. But Mr. Hammond does not confine himself to such small game. For posting the proclamations of election the Statute sets forth that he shall only be paid for the number of miles necessarily travelled for so doing. But what does Mr. Hammond do in the face of such statute? For example, he paid the party who performed that service in the county of Bruce thirty dollars—the amount chargeable for three hundred miles—being the distance necessarily travelled. The counties of Grey and Simcoe, could cost no more each—thus making in the entire division, 900 miles necessarily travelled at the cost of ninety dollars. Who can say thus that was not enough for the work done? But Mr. Hammond did not see it in that light. He thought it necessary, in order to make up his exorbitant bill, to charge from Southampton and back again to every polling place in the division, thus making 2,785 miles, for which he charged the Government $278.50c., thereby pocketing on this single item alone, the snug little sum of $197. The same overcharges are repeated again for delivering the poll books to returning officers, whereby he pitches about another $197 in the same manner. Its a great pity indeed, that Mr. Hammond has not had the benefit of a trial by jury, and had the punishment awarded him he evidently so richly merits.

Strong reflections are thrown out against the then Government for paying such a fraudulent bill. It seems to us, however, that the Government cannot be blamed in this instance. It is well known that such accounts are entrusted to the Audit Department, and that somebody there is to blame. It is currently rumoured, that it was by the intervention of a personal friend of Mr. Hammond's in that department, that the account was smuggled through. If such be the case, the official guilty of such conduct should have been served with his walking ticket along with Mr. Hammond.

There is a further item of $124, represented as having been paid Mr. Lizars, the Clerk of the Peace for Huron and Bruce. Mr. Lizars denies ever having been paid a cent on account of the Saugeen Division election, either by Mr. Hammond or any person else. When a man has been guilty of such an unblushing, wholesale chisseling of the Government, in his capacity of Returning officer, it is impossible to conjecture what he may have been guilty of in his capacity as Registrar, by way of overcharges or otherwise. In common with those whom we have heard expressing an opinion on the subject, we fear we have as yet only the beginning of the late Registrar's transactions.

A STRANGE AFFAIR.

A family who have resided for some time past in Sarnia, named Waingardener, consisting of a man, woman and four children, made up their minds to go to Ingersoll to live, and started for their new home by the 8 a.m. Sarnia train on Wednesday. It appears, however, that the family had not funds enough to allow all of them to ride, and the father concluded to foot it.—For that purpose he started from Sarnia yesterday afternoon walking on the track. He, however, insisted on taking with him his oldest son Mike, saying he would be be lonesome without company. This seemed strange to the mother, as she had already purchased a ticket for Mike, as well as the rest. However, the father would take no denial, and off the two started. This morning two "section men," who were early out on the line with a handcar, came across the mutilated form of a boy about 16 years of age. A severe cut was found on the back of his head, and the lad was quite insensible. The men conveyed him back to the Sarnia station, where he now lies at the point of death. He has not spoken since found, and it is feared never will. Nothing was seen of the father until the train stopped at Currie Road, about 30 miles from the place where the boy was found, when he entered the car. The mother immediately asked him, "Where's Mike?" He returned as evasive answer. One of the employees on the train described the boy they had found, when the father exclaimed, "Mike's killed!" and immediately started back on foot to Sarnia. The mother was nearly distracted. She states that her husband was much addicted to drinking, which made him irritable, and everything points to the belief that he was engineer, if not instrumental in the boy's death, as it is not believed the he will recover.—London Advertiser.

A tree was recently cut down in California, the circumference of which in county foot, and its height, three hundred and twenty-five feet. The tree contained two hundred and fifty thousand feet of timber. Its age is estimated at thirty-one hundred years. The wood was sound and very solid.

A Newspaper Correspondent under fire

Mr. Shaw, the special correspondent of the Daily Telegraph, at Sandeburg relates the following adventure, which lately attended a midnight tour through the Bush camp:—"We had walked all around the fires, had been told the outlines of the enemy, and had the damage done by that day's shelling pointed out to us, and were about to leave, waiting to light our cigars till we had got clear of the powder magazine, when suddenly it seemed as if an electric thrill ran through everybody, and we heard the shrill cry, 'Duck, duck!' In a moment there was a stampede for safety. There was no time for courtesy or precedence. Many sorry, we all flew to the shelter of the sloping banks. Some of us rolled over on the ground, some jumped on the sleeping men, who woke up fancying they had been struck by a shell; but one way or another, upon all-four or flat upon the ground the whole party got under cover. Ten seconds, I am told, is the calculated time between the departure of a shell from Bragg's and its arrival at Dappel. I know if this be the case that a vast amount of mental action can be crowded into a particularly short period.—I had first to realize that a shell was coming; then, as I got my back the wrong way, to turn round and look which side of the fort I ought to go to; then to see if the path was clear; and finally, to crouch under the slope of the bank, supposing an close into it as the resistance of the matter would allow; and yet, after this, I know I had time to think the shell was very long in coming—to recollect a similar incident which had occurred to me at the siege of Gaeta, when a clergyman who had happened to be in my company, opened his umbrella with a view of breaking the force of the missile—and to speculate on the consideration, what were the chances against this particular shell hitting my individual self.—The calculation was proceeding in a decidedly unsatisfactory manner, when I caught the strange, cutting whirr of the shell, as it came flying towards us. I knew it appeared to take an unusually protracted time in getting near. Then the whirr grew louder and louder, close above our heads. I glanced involuntary upwards and saw the shell strike the roof of the mess house some dozen feet beyond our shelter; then there was a flash, followed by a dull crash as it struck and burst. A shower of earth was thrown up into the sky, and fell down over our heads and shoulders. All was over after a moment's pause, and the soldiers got up, shook the dirt off their clothes, and fell to work stacking up the earth which the shell had scattered down. Thus ended my experience of shelling, or rather of being shelled. It was one which I was not sorry to have made, but which I felt no inclination to repeat. As to any exhibition of personal courage or the contrary, I saw none any occasion or opportunity for it.—When once you hear the shell coming there is nothing more to be done, unless you are gonee enough to shriek or scream. You can hardly show that your afraid, unless you are an enough to jump on the batteries and wave your cap, you will find it as hard to show that you are not afraid. Practically, if you keep your eyes about you and have nothing to hinder you seeking shelter at once, the risk, I take it, is very small, and one that no reasonable man would object to run if he had any object in so doing. In spite, however, of all calculations in the world the sensation of hearing a shell whirring towards you is not pleasant to my fancy.—The Prussians, so I learnt from the officer who kindly showed me over the works have lately been in the habit of throwing a shell regularly every two or three hours during the night, and the one with which we were favored was the regular midnight allowance."

A Profane Shipmaster Subdued.

A vessel belonging to this port, on her way from the West Indies, was becalmed in mid ocean. Provisions were beginning to fail, and fears of starvation were felt and expressed.—The captain became impatient, and with fierce imprecations, wished for wind,—he did not care how boisterous it was. His mate—a Christian, and strong in faith,—sought to soothe his irritation by expressions of confidence in God, which only increased his exasperation and profanity. The subordinate officer then ventured to remonstrate, warning his superior that the Almighty could punish insubordination, as well as supply their pressing necessity. Food came most providentially just when it was needed. A dolphin, in its efforts to escape the codfish pursuing it, leaped out of the water, and fell on deck, thus giving the bait required to fish successfully. Before the voyage ended when near our coast, a terrible storm came on, and after doing all that could be done, both captain and mate retired to the cabin. The former expressed his fears as to the issue. The latter reminded him of his awful wishes when they were becalmed. "What are we to do?" said the captain, now humbled and subdued. "Let us pray," was the response, and kneeling side by side, the mate poured out his desires before God, and the captain followed. "Such a prayer," said the mate—"to whom I am indebted for the facts—" I never heard before." From that hour the current of the captain's life has flowed in a new channel; for he has become a new creature in Christ Jesus.—Witness.

A TRUANT WIFE.—Yesterday a farm labourer named Bradman, residing some five miles down the Kingston road, came to the city with a "drop in his eye" and a quiver in his stomach, in search of his "better half," who, it appears, left him last Monday for the purpose of procuring a supply of groceries in Kingston, and had not found it convenient to return to her lord since. He searched the taverns in the vicinity of the market as the most likely places to find her, but all to no purpose; and when the heart-rending thought flashed across his mind that his Anna Maria had gone overboard over the border—he appeared disconsolate, and would not be comforted—because he couldn't find her. He still, however, visit the "Goblin" here felt so sad for the absence of Mrs. Bradman if she had only left the husband and groceries behind her.—London Free Press.

PROGRESS IN THE HOUSE.

We propose to ourselves to give, as far as possible, a short sketch of the doings in the Legislature during the present Session, and will condense from the speeches of members as reported in the Dailies; so that, as far as in our power, our country readers may be on an equality with those who have access to the daily papers.

In our last, we noticed the meeting of the House on Tuesday the 3rd inst. There was little or no business done that day. On Wednesday the House met, and after some unimportant business had been transacted Hon. John A. Macdonald said:—"The member for Hochelaga had yesterday called upon Ministers for information respecting the formation of the new Ministry." And after passing a eulogium on the late Ministry for their manliness in resigning office when they found that from the want of numerical support they could no longer usefully carry on the business of the country, he explained the various means that had been taken to form a strong Government on a broader basis by a union of the leading men of both parties, and their failure; and after explaining how the various attempts had been made, stated that the present Premier, Col. Taché, had only two courses before him: either to state to His Excellency that he was unable to form such a Ministry as had been desired, or to try to construct a pure party Ministry. The latter course had been chosen, and the present Ministry had taken office. He then went on to state that the policy of the Ministry was the same as had been already stated by Mr. Cauchon; that the defence of the country will engage the constant and best attention of the Government, and such steps will be taken as will place the militia force in a position to render prompt and effective service when required, without increasing the existing expense. That Col. Taché, the Premier, who, everyone would allow was eminently qualified for the purpose, would give this subject his best attention. Indeed, it appears from the drift of the hon. gentleman's speech, that what was all along asserted by the Opposition, and as positively denied by the Ministerial papers is correct, the Government is still simply the Cartier-Macdonald one; and such men as Taché and Buchanan are not members of it—they only fill up vacant duties—certainly no influence. The men who are really responsible for the misdeeds of the old Coalition party are the responsible heads of the present Government. The Ministerial cry that the present Ministry is a new one, and not responsible for the misdeeds of the old one, turns out plainly to have been an invention, and got up to deceive. "No additional expense (Mr. Macdonald continued) would be incurred, whilst it was believed much additional efficiency would be obtained.

The next paragraph was as follows:—"Every effort will be made to maintain and extend the Reciprocity Treaty with the United States, and the Roading system under which goods now pass freely through both countries, measures not only important in themselves but calculated to foster those friendly relations which is so desirable to cultivate." This was a grave and important question, and had occupied the attention of the Ministry at the only meeting they had held before the members of the Government went to their constituencies. The hon. gentleman and his colleagues took great credit to themselves when addressing their constituents in various parts of the country for this part of their policy—claiming it as peculiarly their own. But when he read this paragraph to the House he was promptly forced to acknowledge that the late Ministry had done all that could have been done long before they resigned, and that the present men in all their vain glorious boasting had only followed in their footsteps.

The next paragraph was:—"A conference will be sought with the sister Provinces, with the view of effecting a more intimate commercial intercourse with them." The Government, at once, after accepting office, had taken steps to place themselves in communication with the Imperial Government on this point as well as with the lower Provinces. In this, too, they were forced to acknowledge they were only following the example of their predecessors. Thus far they had no policy of their own.

The next paragraph was "Measures for the development of the Northwest territory and the improvement of our communication with the seaboard, will be submitted for the early consideration of Parliament, and such re-adjustment of the [illegible] will be made as may be necessary to prevent the diversion of the western trade from our own waters." In this paragraph, Cauchon and Macdonald henceforth a new light with a vengeance. All will remember the stern opposition that the present Ministry have always given to any proposal to support Canada westward. It is still fresh in our memory. The latter [illegible] opposition, in the Hon. gentleman's speech, as to this canals, has been receiving great attention from the press of the country. As quoted in our last issue copied from the Montreal Witness as to the removal of the canal tolls, will show the effect of their policy in this respect. He went on to say that the Ministry were in favor and would promote means to promote the [illegible] Railway, and that a very favorable [illegible] of the survey had been received from Mr. Sandford Fleming, the surveyor. He were pleased to notice how the question of the International came about. The Hon. gentleman would have forgot all about it had not the Minister of Finance—the anti-Railway jobber, Mr. Galt—thus [illegible] reminded him of it. A splendid opportunity, this, Mr. Galt, to buy cheap and sell dear; don't let your honest brother forget the Railway.

The next paragraph was that relating to the question of Representation by Population. This would remain an open question, unless the gentlemen opposite desired the Government to make it a shuffle.

With respect to the next paragraph, he would accord to the late Commissioner of Crown Lands all praise for zeal and ability in administering the affairs of that department which could properly be claimed for him. That the present Ministry were determined to do their best with this matter also. That the present gold-mining regulations were only temporary, and that it would be their duty to submit a measure for the purpose of placing the whole matter respecting polies as well as mining licenses on some practicable system. He had thus gone over shortly all the measures spoken of in the memorandum. The Government were quite well aware of the difficulties and the responsibility of the position they occupied but they hoped from the candor and fair dealing of the members of both sides to be able to discharge there duties to the advantage of the country, and they hoped to have such a support as the political opinions of honorable gentlemen would enable to give.

These gold-mining regulations have been the subject of much comment. It is said they will have the tendency to throw the gold lands in the hands of speculators. The matter has been pretty freely handled in the House, and we may add here that the Ministry, on Friday, were glad to say that they were only temporary, and that no sales had taken place under them; but members do not appear to have been satisfied with the explanation, for at a later date a motion was made calling for all information in regard to the sale of lands in the auriferous regions.

Thursday was a holiday. On Friday Mr. Galt introduced a Bill to amend the law respecting the Public Accounts and the Board of Audit. This Bill proposes to add to the present number of auditors the deputy heads of the great disbursing departments, so that no money may be paid by any department without the account being properly audited. There was this further important provision in the Bill. It had been a constant cause of complaint and attack on the Government of the day, that expenditure took place without the previous sanction of Parliament. Under the present system, as the estimates were voted only to the 31st December, every expenditure from the 1st of January to April or May, when the Supply Bill was passed, was actually unauthorized expenditure. He proposed that the financial year should end on the 30th of June, and that the Government should be absolutely deprived of the power of making any expenditure not previously authorized by Parliament. In consequence of this change he would this session have to bring down a separate estimate for the period to the 30th June, and next for the year ending June, 1865. Severe attacks had been made on previous Governments for spending money without Parliamentary sanction, but he was certain that no Government ever spent money without Parliamentary sanction, except under great pressure. He believed it would be in accordance with the feeling of the House and the demands of public opinion that the enactment he now proposed should become law. The Hon. Mr. Galt and the Conservative journals have been taking great credit to themselves for his smartness in introducing this Bill—so short in office and done so much. But Mr. Holton said that it must have struck the House as somewhat singular that the Finance Minister, so soon after his return to office, should have discovered deficiencies in the working of his department which he had failed to discover during the four years he had previously been in office. He was happy, however, to be able to agree with him, and might state that what was now proposed—not as regarded the reconstruction of the Board of Audit, though that also engaged his attention, but as to the obtaining of the authority of Parliament for every expenditure, and changing the termination of the fiscal year from 31st December to 30th June—he had determined upon, and communicated his intention to Mr. Galt some weeks before he resigned office, having thought it right to consult that gentleman, as a leading member of the House, and especially familiar with the working of the finance department, as to the expediency of making those changes. It will thus be seen that if there is any credit belonging to any one for the introduction of this Bill it belongs not to Mr. Galt but Mr. Holton.

Further on in the evening Mr. McKellar moved the second reading of the Sons of Temperance Incorporation Amendment Bill. Mr. Taschereau moved an amendment to throw it out. And there were some splendid passages of arms between D'Arcy McGee and J. S. McDonald. It seems for some reason best known to D'Arcy himself, that he is decidedly adverse to the Temperance movement; it is too watery for his taste, and he opposed this Bill to the utmost, on the ground of its being a secret society; when Mr. J. S. McDonald said he remembered how, in a former session, Mr. McGee had spoken long and eloquently against another secret society, whom he had compared to the Thugs of India, yet now he was the most intimate political friend of members of that society, which he had formerly declared to be the curse of his adopted country. Now, the only secret society he had anything to say against was one to suppress intemperance.—His first public act as a member of the Government was to protect against a Bill for the benefit of those unfortunate people who could not be restrained from vicious habits except by combination. Mr. T. Bedingfeld, a Metropolitan, said that at the time when D'Arcy was so opposed to the Orangemen he had got a bad name because he had written against the Queen and Constitution. After consider able talking Mr. Taschereau's amendment was lost, no one voting for it.

On Monday the House met at 3 p.m. A number of Bills to incorporate Mining Companies were introduced; and Mr. Wells moved an address for returns of the receipts and expenditure of the York Roads since their resumption by the Government. Mr. McKellar moved to add "copies of all Orders in Council or other documents relating to the said Roads, dated since the 1st of April last." He understood that the Government had stopped the repairs on the York Roads, and it was rumoured that regulations were in progress to have them restored to Mr. Hagerty's hands. If the late Government did one thing more than another which quite them to the thanks of the country, it was their taking possession of that valuable property. He believed that since they were restored by the Government, and while [illegible] were going on, they were paying [illegible] and was well understood from their how inadequately they were have paid Mr. Beaty when he protested all the tolls and paid nothing for repairs. Mr. Powell, a Metropolitan, tried to prove that the Roads had become almost impossible since they came into the hands of the late Government; he based his statement on the evidence which came from them. This statement in the Leader which were specially proved to be without foundation. The late Commissioner of Crown Lands concluded a speech of a very telling character by saying that while the Roads were in Mr. Beaty's hands he spent nothing in repairing them, and when taken from him by the Government they were in the last state of dilapidation. The late Government not parties to repair them, and were putting them in a condition that they could be offered for sale and a large sum realized for them. But as soon as this Government took office they sent up orders and stopped the repairs. The result was that while the roads generally were greatly improved there were places here and there, a mile or two, in a bad state on account of the stoppage of repairs. He could conceive of no reason for the stoppage of the work except that they were to be put back into Mr. Beaty's hands. The motion was carried. It will thus be seen that another Beaty job was about to be attempted, but has got nipped in the bud. The Opposition are too strong to allow such tricks as this to be palmed on the country again.

Mr. McGiverin moved an address for all official correspondence respecting the Reciprocity Treaty, since the 1st of January last; and Mr. Ianvis a further address for a statement of all moneys advanced to Township Municipalities in Lower Canada, under section 99, chapter 83 of the consolidated statutes, and for copies of the orders in Council relating to the same. If we had space we would like to give the debate that followed in full, but our limits forbid. We clip the following portions, however, from which it will be seen that nearly all the statements which members were making capital of at their elections, lately, were fabulous, and were only manufactured for the purpose of affording political capital. A more masterly and withering expose than that of Messrs Dorion and O'Halloran, we have rarely read; and never more humiliating acknowledgement than that of Mr. Galt and McGee. It seems as if no subterfuge were too mean! No lie too base if it only serves their end! Had we known nothing of the history of these men previous to the 8th of May, we would be convinced from what occurred on that day in the House, that they were not only not trustworthy, but positively dangerous. In introducing his motion, Mr. McGiverin said he desired the correspondence to be brought down, in justice to the late Administration, who, it had been represented on the opposite side, had not done all they could to secure the renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty. In his reply Mr. Galt said he would be wanting in fairness to the late Administration if he did not say that their action on this subject was one which, to a very great extent, if not wholly, had been endorsed by the existing Administration. Mr. Holton said Mr. Galt's acknowledgment was in singular contrast with the ground taken by the President of the Council, at Hamilton, when he claimed that he and his colleagues had dealt with this question with much greater earnestness and efficiency than had characterised the action of the late Administration. In speaking of Mr. Ianvis's motion regarding money advanced—Mr. A. A. Dorion showed that Mr. Galt's famous Sherbrooke speech was falsehood and perversion from beginning to end—that when the papers were brought down it would be shown that there was no foundation for the statements made as to these advances by Mr. Galt in his Sherbrooke speech. They were made under the authority of an Act introduced by Mr. Galt himself in 1859, and were made not to friends merely of the Government, as asserted by Mr. Galt. Of the whole forty thousand dollars advanced under the authority of that Act, upwards of thirty thousand dollars were paid to municipalities represented by members supporting the present Government. Mr. Galt's speech, therefore, contained a double misstatement — that when Mr. G. charged the late Government with putting their hands into the public chest and applying this money without authority, such an accusation came ill from him, when the action of the Government was in accordance with the recommendation of the report written and signed by Mr. Galt himself. There was this feature also which distinguished these advances from those made by Mr. Galt to the Grand Trunk, that they were not paid before they were due; that it was money to which the municipalities receiving it were entitled. Yet as an offset to his own unauthorised advances of hundreds of thousands of dollars to the Grand Trunk and Bank of Upper Canada, Mr. Galt had the effrontery to speak of the $40,000 as an unauthorised advance, although paid in accordance with the Act of Parliament, in pursuance of the recommendation of Mr. Galt's own report, to municipalities entitled to receive it. Mr. Galt made an extremely lame defence to Mr. Dorion's accusation trying to misrepresent his statements, and refusing to be corrected. Indeed, as we said before, we cannot conceive of anything more humiliating than Mr. Galt's position. Mr. O'Halloran next administered a well merited rebuke to Mr. McGee—shewing that his statements at Berlin were pure fabrications, and when D'Arcy was fairly cornered, and before the whole House proven to have stated an untruth. His mode of defence was to make an attack on Mr. O'Halloran with much virulence, applying to him the most abusive epithets. He termed him a spy, a go-between party and party, a man who learned the secrets of one party to take them over and reveal them to another. It was for this treachery he declared that O'Halloran had been rewarded with a silk gown.

Mr. O'Halloran briefly replied, claiming that the approval which the Bar of his district had given to the Government, in appointing him Queen's Counsel, was enough to warrant his heading but little the abusive language applied to him by Mr. McGee.

REFORM CONVENTION.

On Tuesday evening a meeting of some of the leading Reformers was held in Town to consider what steps ought to be taken in view of a general election, when it was resolved to call a meeting of the Reformers of the County to organize a Reform Convention. The meeting has been arranged to take place on the first Saturday of June, at 1 o'clock, p.m., in the Committee Rooms, over the Toronto Bank.

We beg to call the attention of Reformers throughout the County to the above notice. It is of vital importance that some preparation be made in view of a probable election in our County. And active Reformers in the County put their shoulder to the wheel, and that in good time, we will very likely be as we have lately been: pre-represented in the House.

MINISTERIAL PROSPECT.

It will be in the recollection of our readers that the late Ministry resigned though possessing a majority in the House. Constantly harassed by a factious minority who were willing to resist to any means, however despicable, to attain power, they felt that though they had a majority that it was much too small to enable them to carry through any great reform measures; and as the country was much in need of Legislation they determined to sacrifice all personal feeling in the matter, and accordingly placed their resignation in the hands of the Governor General. The idea appears to have obtained that surely some means could be found of conciliating parties, and that by that means a strong Government could be found. We think that the Macdonald-Dorion Ministry deserve great credit for their willingness to give up the reigns of power when they felt that they could not be as useful as a Government ought to be. Various means were tried so to arrange matters that a strong government might be formed, but it appears that the dividing line between the two parties is too broad for any fusion to take place.—The consequence was, as we all know, that a pure party Government has been formed under the leadership of Messrs. Cartier and Macdonald. On an appeal to the country by the members of the present Ministry one of them was defeated, and consequently if no other change has taken place, the present conservative party must be weaker than before the resignation of the last Ministry. Were they equally patriotic with the members of the late Ministry they too would feel it their duty to resign, but of this there is not the least likelihood. We are persuaded that no gentle hints will be sufficient to awaken men at present in power to the fact that they would only be doing their duty by resigning. They will leave no stone unturned, no trick untried that will retain them in office for a day longer.

Numerically stronger than their opponents, as we believe the present Opposition to be, they have yet a delicate and difficult task before them. By the defeat of Foley they have gained two votes, but two votes would not be a material addition to their strength, and were they again in power the position of things would not be much improved. They would still be opposed at every step by their unscrupulous enemies, and would find it as difficult almost as ever to carry any measure of importance. The present Opposition have not decided what steps to take in view of this difficulty; but so far from imitating the late Opposition, have given as yet their hearty approval to the measures that have been proposed for the common good. Two courses have been proposed by the members of the Reform party: one a direct vote of want of confidence—the other to allow the Ministry to develope their policy and bring forward their budget, and if satisfied with the details thereof to go on with the work of the session, and instead of giving a factious opposition at every step, cordially to assist in the passing of those great measures required by the necessities of the country. Both these views have their supporters, and both are liable to objection. A direct vote of want of confidence would, if carried, entail the necessity of a new ministry or an appeal to the country. As we have said before, neither of these are desirable. The former has been tried, the latter is not likely to better matters. It appears to us that constant votes of want of confidence would only tend to a dead-lock, and that legislation would cease altogether. Many think that the sooner things arrive at this stage the better will it be for the country.

It is objected to the other alternative, (that of allowing the present Ministry a chance) that there is no need, they have been tried too long already, and have been found wanting. There is great truth in this objection, but we think that it may be made too much of. The Cartier-Macdonald Ministry were in power at a very peculiar time in the history of our country, namely, the Railway time, and at that time every man was extravagant, there was no end to the money every one had, people thought it would never go done; and we have no doubt that the country represented by the government participated in that extravagance as well as individuals. Now, however, things are altered. Every one cries poverty, and if we can place any confidence in the professions of Mr. Galt and his confreres, they are determined to be both honest and economical; could we place any confidence in the men in power, we have no hesitation in saying that the latter is by far the better policy to pursue. The country is greatly in need of Legislation, and the present Ministry, profiting by the lesson they have learned both as to the temper and wishes of the House, would conduct themselves with much more care. The programme of their predecessors seem to be the one they are about to carry out; indeed we confess there can hardly be two policies, no matter what party occupies the Ministerial benches. The legislation and policy on all but the great questions of Governmental Reform must be the same. We hope the reform party will cautiously weigh every possible contingency before deciding what course to pursue—precipitancy would be ruin. Whilst as a strong Opposition they can ensure the passing of many useful bills that have been too long delayed. And whilst a strong Opposition party honestly desirous of nothing but their country's good, is almost a guarantee of the honesty of the party in power. A weak Ministry with an unscrupulous Opposition would be only a source of weakness and embarrassment.

Fire at Calcutt's Old Brewery.

On Saturday night about eleven o'clock, the building lately occupied by Henry Calcutt, Esq., as a Brewery was discovered to be on fire, and though the Fire Company were promptly on the spot, the flames had made too much headway for anything to be done to save the premises. By great exertions, favoured by a heavy rain, they were enabled to confine the fire to the Brewery; as it was, the neighboring houses had a narrow escape. Mr. Calcutt's loss is about $150, consisting of barrels and lumber. No doubt is entertained that this was the work of an incendiary. Some person was heard to leave in a boat from the rear of the premises shortly before the fire broke out, and is supposed to have fired the party who set the building on fire. It is a pity but some means could be devised to discover the parties who have been the cause of so much destruction of property in Town lately. Would it not be well for the Town Council to offer a reward.

Another Contest.—We call attention to Mr. Lesher's notice in another column. His last was abruptly broken up by the cry of "Fire," and the audience warmly solicited a repetition of the entertainment, to which Mr. Lesher consented. We understand by the notice that the charges are to be small. We think Mr. L. a good entertainer.

GENERAL GARIBALDI.

Perhaps no General in modern times has received such an ovation from the English people as has been accorded to Garibaldi. Wherever he went admiring crowds followed, and it is said that it sometimes took four or five hours for his carriage to advance a mile or two; nor was he safe from his enthusiastic admirers even when he sought the privacy of a private visit. At the port Tennison's, he was beset on every hand, they hid in the garden among the bushes—they waylaid him at every step. Invitations from almost every Municipality in England and Scotland were sent to him; in short, as Lord Palmerston well expressed it—every man, woman and child in the Empire seemed anxious to shake hands with him. The consequence was, his health began to suffer. He came to England for his health; his wound was not wholly cured, and the severe strain on his faculties, both bodily and mental was becoming severely detrimental. The General was advised to return home; there was no such thing as privacy for him in England. "The people would have hugged him to death." On the 22nd ult., he was to go to Cornwall to visit Colonel Peard, (Garibaldi's Englishman) who fought so bravely in the various battles in which the General was engaged in the war with Austria; and after staying with him for two days, he was to leave for Caprera, "his Island home" in the Duke of Sutherland's yacht. The Duke and Duchess would accompany him. The General's departure has been so sudden—the disappointment thereat so universal that people were not found wanting to say that the English Government had forced him to go, and this was done under the pressure of the Emperor of the French. In the House of Lords, the Earl of Clarendon, and in the House of Commons Lord Palmerston gave such a suggestion an implicit denial—stating that the Emperor knew his business too well to interfere, even if he had wished the General's departure. But far from it. He was perfectly satisfied that the Englishmen wished Garibaldi well, and thought his English reception was well intended, and such as Englishmen only could give.

LAKEFIELD ANGLICAN CHURCH.

At a meeting of the Ladies of the congregation of the English Church at Lakefield, which took place on Thursday the 5th inst., it was resolved that a Bazaar, in aid of the Fund now being raised for the purpose of building a new Church, be held in the village in the course of the month of August.

The following Ladies were appointed a Committee for carrying out the contemplated object; and should any friend at a distance feel disposed to assist them in their undertaking, they will thankfully accept contributions and gratefully acknowledge their receipt:

MONAGHAN COUNCIL.

MONAGHAN, May 7th, 1864.

The Council met at 10 o'clock.

Present: the Reeve, Messrs. Collins, Leary, Campbell, and Lockie.

The minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed.

The petition of John Tully and 26 others, praying for the expenditure of certain statute labor to be allowed on the boundary lines between Smith and Monaghan and between Cavan and Monaghan. The Council said the former had always been allowed, and they believed had been performed. The latter was refused in consequence of Cavan having rendered no assistance for some time past.

Communications.—Mr. John Tully: that unless certain grievances named were redressed, the Council would hold themselves amenable to be brought before the County Judge to give an account of their unlawful deeds.

The County Treasurer: describing certain lands which had been patented to the Commissioners of Peterborough Town Trust, containing sixty-one and one half [61½] acres.

A By-law appointing Pathmasters received its third reading.

A By-law amending By-law No. 45, for regulating and regulating the running at large of certain animals in the Township of Monaghan—and much more stringent than the original one—received its final readings. One hundred copies were ordered to be printed for distribution.

A By-law to define the duties of Pathmasters and other Township Officers, which the Council admitted was very much needed—was introduced by Mr. Lockie, and finally passed.

A By-law to enable Pathmasters to sell or preserve timber, trees, sand, stone or gravel on any allowance of road in the township, was read a third time.

The sum of ten dollars was allowed to the Treasurer, and five dollars to the Clerk, for extra duties performed during last year.

R. Goodfellow, and seven others who signed the petition, were allowed to expend their statute labour on the boundary line between the 7th and 8th concessions.

The Council refused to order a survey at the expense of the township, of certain roads named in the petition of Joseph Hunter.

The Reeve was requested to call at once and see Mr. Sheridan respecting the case of Mr. Bolridge.

Mr. Fowler was heard before the Council respecting the granting of statute labour to boundary line between Cavan and Monaghan. Application refused.

The Clerk was directed to inform the Bureau of Agriculture &c., in reply to the circular, that sufficient labour can be procured in Peterboro' to supply the present wants of the Municipality.

On the motion of Mr. Collins, seconded by Mr. Campbell,—the Council adjourned to Monday the 1st of August, at 10 o'clock, a. m.—Con.

GENERAL GARIBALDI.

Fire.—On Thursday evening about 10 o'clock the stable in the rear of the residence of Mr. Cameron, Druggist, was discovered to be on fire. Mr. Cameron had been in the stable only a few minutes previously without any light, and there was no apparent cause of fire; within a few minutes of his return to the house he was alarmed by the cry of fire and on going out found his stables and hack premises blazing. They were burned to the ground. From the fact that the fire originated in the loft among the hay, Mr. Cameron is satisfied it was the work of an incendiary. His loss is about $150. No insurance.

American War.—There have been stirring times in the neighborhood of Richmond for the last eight days, and the Federals claim to have won a great victory—acknowledging a loss of about 15,000 killed and wounded. Very little is allowed to transpire, and great uncertainty consequently is felt as to the result. We hope to receive more reliable intelligence in our next issue.

Men Drowned.—We are sorry to have to state that two men were drowned at the Fenelon Falls slide on Saturday last. The water is extremely high this spring, and cribs are running early which makes it exceedingly dangerous. We have not heard how these unfortunate men lost their lives. And forbear to give the names till we feel more certain about it.

Lecture.—W. M. Roger, Esq., A. B., will deliver a Lecture on the subject of "Muscular Christianity," in the Town Hall, on the 18th inst. We would advise all our friends to be present; Mr. Roger is a young townsman of our own of great ability, who will no doubt sustain on this occasion the high reputation he earned as the University.

As will be seen by advertisement, the sale of the Beaver Mead Property has been postponed, we believe on account of Mr. Conger's illness.

THE FENIANS IN HAMILTON.

The Irish Canadian, organ of the Toronto Fenians, claims that Mr. Isaac Buchanan is indebted to the Fenians in Hamilton for his election. That journal writes as follows:—

"There is one circumstance connected with the Hamilton election which we are loath to pass by unnoticed, and as it raises a point of veracity, we deem it proper to place it before the public. In his letter to the Montreal Gazette, dated House of Assembly, Quebec, March 21, 1864, Mr. T. D. McGee, alluding to the Hibernian Association of Hamilton, stated in the most positive terms that the head of the serpent had been crushed beneath the heel of Right Rev. Dr. Farrell, Bishop of that diocese, and that speedily it hissed its last. If we accept the words of Mr. McGee as correct, is it not a little astonishing to find this same "serpent," in one short month, crop up so vigorously, with a train so numerous and formidable as to command the approach to the Assembly chamber of our Canadian Legislation. But we do not believe Mr. McGee's assertion that the Hibernian were squelched, and for this very reason, that it is to their suffrages Mr. Buchanan owes his election. They held the fate of the Taché-Campbell (Taché-Macdonald) Government in their possession, and if they did not deprive the member for Montreal West of his six thousand a year, assuredly it was not because that gentleman did not richly deserve such treatment at their hands, but because of the well-known exclusiveness and bigoted tendencies of the opposition candidate, Mr. McElroy and his supporters. It was well for the Government of which he is a member, that Mr. McGee did not make his appearance in Hamilton on the 25th and 26th ult.; had he done so, Mr. Buchanan might have enjoyed the retirement accorded to the defeated of North Waterloo, and he himself been sent for re-election to his constituents in Griffintown."

We hope that this will be satisfactory to the super-loyal organs of the British Constitutional Government. Mr. Buchanan was elected and the Government saved by the votes of the Fenians! On the mere mention of an unfounded rumour that Mr. Michael Murphy was supporting Mr. McElroy, some of the Government organs were dreadfully shocked. "Oh," said one, "if you vote for Mr. McElroy, you vote for Michael Murphy and treason." Here said another, we have the opposition "taking to there embrace" a man who has "rendered his name infamous" by "his treasonable harangues." What story shall we have from these organs now? Are they equally horrified to find the Fenians in the loving embrace of the Government and its extra loyal friends—and to find that by that loving embrace alone did the Government escape a ruinous defeat? We fancy not. They never have the slightest idea of applying to their own case the rules they lay down for others.

It will be noticed that the Irish Canadian is especially severe upon Mr. D'Arcy McGee—telling him that if the Fenians of Hamilton refrained from breaking down the Government, it was not because of his presence in the Cabinet, but rather in spite of it.—The Minister of Agriculture is assured that had he appeared in Hamilton during the election, the Fenians would perhaps have been sufficiently exasperated to overlook the exclusiveness and bigoted "tendencies" of the Opposition, and to defeat Mr. Buchanan and the Government. The bitterness of the Fenians towards Mr. McGee is easily accounted for. They seem to look upon him as a temporary deserter from their principles, and regard him with far greater distavour than they do persons who have never sympathised with their views. The lectures upon loyalty which he has addressed to the Canadian public generally, and to the Fenians in particular, have worked up this feeling to fever heat. The Fenians have difficulty in finding words harsh enough to apply to him, and in electing Mr. Buchanan make the reservation that his colleague, Mr. McGee, richly deserves to be turned out of office. That they were able to overcome their intense feelings of hostility to their votes for the Government as a whole, shows how much they prefer the super-loyal party in office to the Liberal Opposition.—Globe.

The New York World devotes a couple of columns in describing an exhibition in the Cooper Institute on Tuesday evening, by the Davenport brothers, who created quite a sensation by their "mysterious displays of unaccountable manifestations." There was an immense concourse of spiritual mediums present at their performances, who seemed quite delighted that their doctrine had found so many admirers. There was a sort of magic box upon the platform, from six to eight feet broad and eight to ten feet high, which was closely examined by a committee selected for the purpose consisting of Colonel Olcott and Rev. G. T. Flanders, pastor of the Second Universalist Church. The doors being thrown open, two seats were discovered, one on either side. The doors being shut, an opening of less than a foot square in the shape of a diamond remained near the top. The closet was pronounced simply a plain affair, with no spring, traps or machinery, in any part, and the seats were securely fastened. The Davenport brothers were then closely tied, as was stated, in the most complicated manner, after which bells, trumpets, banjoes, and all sorts of instruments made themselves felt on the heads of many persons among the audience, and Mr. Flanders experienced strange treatment in the magic box, where he accompanied the tied brothers. He said that he felt hands all over his face, upon his breast, back, shoulders, his nose was held tightly, his ears pulled, and he was struck with instruments, and all the while he had his hands on the young men's legs and his fingers stretched so as to touch their bodies and they were immovable. Mr. McKinley, of Corn Hatch fame, doubted the statement of the Rev. gentleman, but he was called to order by the audience, and he was invited to take a seat in the box. Mr. Barnum, who was present, declared the Davenports to be greater humbugs than himself, and like the rest of the audience, was quite pleased with the evening's entertainment in the spirit world.

OUR ELECTIONS.

Every well-wisher of his fellow-citizens regrets an election contest. Aside from the political ends to be gained (which, thanks to Rule and the Secret Ballot, are of secondary importance now) the demoralization which follows in its train, and the heartburnings and bitterness of feeling which are engendered, are deplorable. Men drunk and vile are dreadful from the day of nomination to the close of the polls, when they have not the ability, and sometimes not a disposition, though as at any other time. The law regulating the opening of all public houses of entertainment during polling days is—like all legislative liquor curbs—absolute weakness,—just worth the paper on which it is printed. In this city there is no pretence of keeping it. Groceries are open earlier, drive a longer business, and close later than upon any other day of the year. Instead of being sold, liquor is indiscriminately and liberally given away. Drunken voters swagger and swear through our streets as ignorant of their duty and their doings, as they are regardless of their shame.

Nor is this all. Were the degrading scenes of city elections confined to the drunken class, we might pity more than blame the unfortunates. But such is not the case. Men who boast of their morality, and pass in every day business for honest, industrious citizens, deliberately put themselves up at auction. The contest was in several wards very close, and these men, with the coolest effrontery announce their intentions of waiting for the highest bidder towards the close of the poll. It is a patent fact that there were scores holding back last week. However honestly-disposed the candidates may be, such men almost force them to illegitimate measures. We do not say that either party in this election has bought or will buy support; but we do say, that in all our election experience, we never saw so much merchandize in the political market, and if the sale is not made, the candidates and their committees will display more honesty than is generally conceived upon similar occasions.

We regret to write these of our own city; we regret more to know that there are such pedlars of political principle amongst us;—but we believe Hamilton is not alone in the trade. Such men are scattered through every constituency in our Province, and so long as there are buyers they will be ready to sell even their birthright.—Hamilton C. C. Advocate.

THE GOLD REGULATIONS.

The policy adopted by the Ministry with reference to the Gold-bearing lands of the Chaudiere is causing great dissatisfaction among the miners and also throughout the country. The late Ministry following out the policy adopted in Australia, and Nova Scotia, leased small claims of a few rods in extent, for working, and thus, not only brought the working of the Gold Mines within the reach of all desirous of engaging in the business, but also took the best way of securing a revenue, and thus rendering those lands profitable to the Treasury. The new Ministry, however, soon revised all this. They issued an order in Council, ordering that the gold lands should be sold at $2 per acre. The effect of this is to place these lands in the hands of capitalists, to the exclusion of the working miners, who cannot afford to to pay the sum required to purchase. The result will be that the gold bearing lands will in a short time be in the hands of speculators, who will do as they please with the working miner. Indeed, it is said, that already, a large part of these lands have fallen into the hands of American speculators. One company in New York is advertised as possessing 60,000 acres of land including 12 miles of river frontage, on the Chaudiere C. E.—This policy of allowing such large monopolies cannot be too severely condemned.—But what better can be expected from Galt, Cartier & Co.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL.

From the Quebec Correspondent of the Globe.

In the debate yesterday, the President of the Council, as you will have seen from the telegraphic report, was mercilessly roasted by one speaker after another on the Opposition side, especially Mr. Holton. The Opposition were very anxious to hear Mr. Buchanan explain on what common ground he now stands with Mr. Galt, whose well known views on all questions of labour, money and commerce are the very antipodes to his own. It would have been rich to have heard Sir Isaac Fogbanks explain what compromises he consented to or enforced, before placing himself in the same cabinet with Mr. Galt, whom he used to denounce as a "hard money bigot." And to do use Isaac justice, he was willing, nay, anxious to explain. He is blind to the absurdity which everybody else sees in his theories, and is never loath to expound them before any audience. Yesterday, accordingly, he was taking copious notes for a reply, and several times was rising to speak, and was only prevented by his friends near him pulling him down by his coat tails. His colleagues wished to be spared the absurd exhibition which Isaac was sure to make. They only put him into the cabinet, because they believed he was certain of his election by a large majority. In this they were disappointed, and I believe that even his colleagues, except for his vote, will not be sorry to get rid of him, by the success of Mr. McElroy's petition.

The result of Low Wages for Work women.

The practical result of low wages of seamstresses and workwomen was illustrated by an incident which came to our knowledge last night. A young girl, neatly though plainly dressed, was arrested by a police officer for improperly soliciting men upon the street. When taken to the station-house, she admitted the charge, but said she was compelled that course of life or starve. She came from Vermont with her mother and another sister, because they could find no employment there. Since their removal the mother had been sick, and their support had devolved upon this girl, who worked in a shop on Essex street, and received ten cents for making thirteen coat button-holes. Work as hard as she might, she could not earn enough to support the family, and so was compelled to add to her earnings by going upon the street. She told her story plainly, but with an apparent feeling that she was justified by the necessities. Other facts known to the police corroborated her story, and there is no doubt that she was driven to a life of shame. Such facts show that there is still work for philanthropists and reforms at home, even in Boston.—Boston Post, April 30.

Fire.—On Wednesday evening, about 9 o'clock, the stables in rear of the residence of Alex. Morrow, Esq., were destroyed by fire. At one time fears were entertained that the residence of Mr. Morrow, and that of Charles Perry, Esq., Mayor, would have been destroyed, but by the great exertions of the bystanders they were both saved. The furniture from both houses was removed, and is much damaged. Mr. Morrow's loss is covered by insurance in the Provincial—the only insurance, we believe, on any of the property. About 11 o'clock, and after the fire had been quite put out, another fire was discovered in the stable of Mr. J. A. Hartley, but was fortunately put out before any damage was done. Both fires, it is said, was the work of incendiarism. The fire Company was promptly on the spot, and although the engine was useless from want of water, the members of the Company were most active in using the means at their command to put out the fire.—Peterborough Review.

Children Scalded from Home.—

COUNTY OF PETERBOROUGH.

We regret to learn that Mr. Cooper, the member for Peterborough, is very ill, and has been unable to appear in his place in the House since he returned that city. There is a rumour in circulation to the effect that Mr. Cooper, on account of his illness, has signified his willingness to resign, and that an arrangement has been come to with the Government by which he is to be rewarded with a place in the Legislature. The defeated Postmaster General has come to Upper Canada, which may be regarded by some persons as corroborative of this rumour. We can hardly encourage it possible, however that Ministers will be so foolish as to court a second defeat in Mr. Foley's person, for assuredly an attempt to force him to carry Peterborough a second time would result as did his recent contest in Wentworth.—Globe.

MR. FOLEY AT THE DECLARATION.—Though Mr. Foley was fairly beaten by a majority of 165, he does not at all relish the idea of retiring from the representation of North Wentworth. He said, that he still considered himself their true and legal representative. He presented to the Sheriff a protest of no less than eight counts against the return of Mr. Bowman, stating other things he charged that he had the show of hands at the nomination, that no poll was demanded, all he could in favor returned by the Sheriff in Foley's favor, and that all votes after that were null and void. Now, a poll was demanded by Mr. Moyer, who was heard by many on the hustings. Mr. Foley also complains of bribery on the part of his opponents, when it is notorious that if there was bribery at all, it was on the part of his own friends. The protest throughout is a tissue of misrepresentations and falsehoods. Its only object is to give Mr. Foley an excuse for holding on to some $400 per month as long as he can.—Perth Star.

Justice to a Patent Medicine.

It is not often we lend a word in favor of Patent Medicines, as we very seldom are satisfied of their good results. But there is one preparation so long established, and of such acknowledged merit, that we feel we do the public a service in recommending it. We have reference to Dr. Wister's Balsam of Wild Cherry the most remarkable remedy of the age for all throat an lung diseases. Many of our citizens can attest to the truth of this from personal observation.—Quebec Chronicle.

Certificate from a well known citizen of Cornwall.

Messrs. S. W. Fowle & Co., Boston,

Gents,—Having experienced the beneficial results of Dr. Wister's Balsam of Wild Cherry in my own person and other members of my family, in cases of severe coughs and colds, I unhesitatingly give you my testimony, believing it to be the remedy par excellence for all diseases of the throat and chest, and would sincerely recommend it as such.

Yours truly,

BEAVER MEAD FARM,

The Farm is in good order, productive, and within one mile of the Town of Peterborough.

There is also a very excellent mill site, most conveniently situated for milling and manufacturing purposes, with about 5 or 6 acres of land attached.

The remainder of the property is now being surveyed into lots varying in size from one to ten acres, and will be sold either at private sale or Public Auction, in lots to suit purchasers.

Poetry.

SIMON TO M. R. F.

Ah, Michael, my beauty,
The straight path of duty,
Ne'er yet has been travelled by you;
And now we all run it,
That you did not pursue it,
And still lived in famed Waterloo.

The crisis is pretty,
The mail bags to carry,
In a Lower Canadian canoe,
Was a difficult task,
And 'twas no use to ask
Assistance in famed Waterloo.

From Lotus's new book,
A leaf, sure you took,
And it was a great scandal to you;
As with "Our House,"
It is "six cuss a rouse,"
So it was in the famed Waterloo.

The course you're pursuin'
Leads straight to ruin,
And gives consequence so many and twitches!
To ride on the fence
Is a deemed expensive,
And plays hob with the ends of one's breeches
—Grumbler.

A Highland Mode of Reckoning.

A Highlander who had become "unfortunate," came to Glasgow to meet his "friends," that is his creditors. Of course he was long-headed enough to wait cope "a man of business." The lawyer thought he saw as much about Donald's manoging, that if he had been honest to the backbone the creditors might have looked for full payment, and, truth to tell; they not only thought so, but plainly told this to their Celtic debtor. Donald at first hisited at 5s. in the pound. The was indignantly rejected, and the whole terrors of the law threatened against him, which shook his nerves wonderfully, as he told his legal adviser that he did not like "these——— tirty sherra offishers to pe troubling a shentleman." He rose to 10s. in the pound, but beyond that he would not budge; indeed it was a pretty good fetch. As he lived in a very remote part of the West Highlands, his creditors considered it prudent to accept of this offer, although satisfied that they were deliberately swindled. He granted bills with security for his composition, payable at three and six months after date. About the end of the six months the lawyer wrote his Highland client, reminding him that the last instalment was about due. In due course he received from Donald a very rough-looking epistle, to the following effect;

"DEAR SIR—I am shust your letter received by Dugald M'Pherson, her next door neaber and cousin. She'll preacht it from the post offish, as she was coming anyway. Surely ye must pe not richt about the statement to pay—it pe not due for three months yet. You'll knew it was to pay at three and six months. Now you'll knew three and six months pe nine month all the world over, and in Glasgow too pe surely. I called on good Mr. M'Tavish, the schoolmaster—clever man, Mr. M'Tavish, yes-as in the whole world, and Glasgow too; and he is a cousin of my owa—and he said to me, "Donald, sure three and six month be nine month all the world over." She said that out of her own mouth, and he wondered very much where you had learned yow counting. I told him that lawyers were fery pad counters; that poor ignorant podies, they only knowed that two times three and fourpence (whaer you'll get the fourpence?—not I'll don't know) shust pe ten and eightpence, a thing they are very fond of charging for doing very little. So you'll see I stood your friend with the maister, and you got off bravely. He pitied you poor ignorant podies, surely, that did not know hoo many months mak nine. But as to the statement you see that it is no due for three months past and to come; and so I am to be in Glasgow in two or three months after that, the bits o'Bills can lie over till I come. ———them, do they thocht a shentleman will not pay dirty bits o'Glasgow weaver bodies. ———their impudence, if I'll had them here they would not craw so crouse as they did when they'll had her naicsel' in Glasgow. I would make them potter pairns wi' my stick o'er their shoulders. My very plood was poiling when the———uncivil peasts turned up their noses at the fire shillings, and would have her in jail. Did you'll ever knew such impudence, to jail a shentleman, a nineteenth cousin of Jura's too. ——— them, if she'll knew then what she'll knew now,———a bawbee less nor mair they would have got than her five shillings, and plenty, and too much too. I will saw yes soon. Goot day to you, and mind me to Rory, my cousin Rory. Praw lad, Rory, and very like his mother. Yes."

TAKING DOWN A LAWYER.

A story is told of a very eminent lawyer in New York receiving a severe reprimand from a witness on the stand whom he was trying to browbeat. It was an important issue, and in order to save his cause from defeat it was necessary that Mr. A——— should impeach the witness. He endeavored to do it on the ground of age. The following dialogue ensued:—"How old are you?" Seventy-two years." "Your memory, of course, is not so brilliant and vivid as it was twenty years ago, is it?" "I do not know but it is." "State some circumstance which occurred, say twelve years ago, and we shall be able to see how well you can remember." "I appeal to your honor if I am to be interrogated in this manner—it is insolent." The judge said "Yes, sir, state it." The witness replied, "Well, sir, if you compell me to do it, I will. About twelve years ago you studied in Judge B———'s office, did you not?" "Yes." "Well sir, I remember your father coming into my office and saying to me, Mr. D———, my son is to be examined to-morrow, and I wish you would lend me fifteen dollars to buy him a suit of clothes." I remember also, sir that from day to this he has never paid me the sum. That sir, I remember as though it had been but yesterday." The lawyer said (considerably abashed.) "That will do sir," to which the witness replied, "I presume it will."

A CAUTIOUS IRISHMAN?—An Irishman was asked at dinner whether he would take some of the apple-pie? "is it housesome?" inquired Teddy. "To be sure it is," was the reply; "what makes you ask such a question?" "Bekause," said the new comer, "I once had an uncle that was killed with the apple-pliy, and sure I thought it might be something of that sort."

A certain judge was reprimanding an attorney for bringing several small suits into court, and remarked that it would have been much better for all parties had he persuaded his clients to leave their cases to the arbitration of two or three honest men. "Please your honor," retorted the lawyer, "they are so small we do not choose to trouble honest men with them."

THE SELF-EMPTYING

WATER-DRAWER.

THE undersigned, while thanking the public in general for the liberal patronage they have bestowed on him, since his commencement in business, begs to state that he continues to manufacture his celebrated

PATENT WATER-DRAWER!

AT BLYTHE MILLS.

You must remember that by buying one of my Water-drawers, you get your water pure, which you cannot do by a suction Pump. I warrant them NOT TO FREEZE, and to stand as long, if not longer, than any Pump; and, besides, you save over fifty per cent. I can sell them cheaper than any Pump-maker in Canada! If anything goes astray by fair play within one year from the time of purchase, I bind myself to re-place it; so you cannot be deceived. Now, any one who is in need of a Pump would do well to get one of my Water-drawers at once. I have two teams out at all times to deliver them, and persons residing at a distance will receive prompt attention by sending a letter to the undersigned

Messrs. Henry & Co.

Having on various occasions used your Liniment, I am happy to say that I have always found it beneficial. I have frequently used it for Bowel Complaints, and I have never known it to fail in effecting a cure. I think it the best medicine I ever used for Diarhea summer complaint, and disorders of a similar character I have also found it a never failing specific for Colds, and for affections of the head. I always recommended it to my friends, and would not be without it in the house for any consideration.

N. H. DOWN'S VEGETABLE BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

A CERTIFICATE

WORTH A MILLION.

An Old Physician's Testimony.

READ:

Waterbury, Vt.,
Nov. 24th, 1859.

Although I do not like the practice of Physicians recommending indiscriminately, the patent medicines of the day; yet after a trial of ten years, I am free to admit that there is one medicine before the public that any Physician can use in his practice, and recommend to the public with perfect confidence; that medicine is Rev. N. H. Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

I have used it myself with the very best success, and now, whenever I am troubled with a Cough or Cold, I invariably use it. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are suffering from a Cold or a Cough, for the Croup, Whooping Cough, and all diseases tending to consumption, and to the Profession as a reliable article.

I am satisfied of its excellence beyond a doubt, having conversed personally with the Rev. N. H. Downs about it. He informed me of the principal ingredients of which the Elixir is composed, all of which are purely Vegetable and perfectly safe.

J. B. WOODWARD, M.D.
Now Brigade Surgeon U. S. Army.

This old, time-tried, standard remedy still maintains its popularity. When all others have proved inefficient, the ELIXIR alone continues to give satisfaction.—Use it for

COUGHS, COLDS,
CATARRH,
ASTHMA,
CROUP,

Incipient Consumption and all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs.

Thirty years ago the Elixir's first made its appearance; and even then, in its primitive and imperfect state, produced such extraordinary results that it became, at once, a general favourite. Many have made it, what it really is, a Family Medicine.

For more than half the diseases "to which flesh is heir," originate from colds, so this may be considered a general preventive of all diseases, by removing the primeval cause.

ADULTS

Should always keep this Family Physician at hand; and by its timely use save hundreds of dollars that would otherwise be swallowed up in disburging doctor's fees.

TANNER'S GERMAN OINTMENT!

Give Honor to whom Honor is due.

TANNER'S GERMAN OINTMENT is one article that has long been wanted in South America and the United States, and is pronounced by many Doctors in their practice the Healing Balsam, Rheumatism, Sore Throat, Old Sores, Chapped Hands, &c. We will leave the public to judge for themselves of the virtues of this Ointment by reading the certificates below from Gentlemen of high standing, parties on whose word on the subject may be placed.

(From a Minister.)

DR. TANNER,
Dear Sir,

Your German Ointment I have used to my family for a good many years and consider it a very good article for sore eyes. I was afflicted on at one time that I was compelled to leave my pulpit, but after using it by rubbing it into my eyes for a short time MY EYES began to grow stronger and get well. I am now able to read print as fair off as any person.

Respectfully yours,

DR. TANNER,
Dear Sir,

If a person knows the value to them self to get a good remedy for any Complaint, but for a handy Ointment, this is unequaled in any part in the Market. Dr. Tanner's German Ointment, I've by an old physician, was called Ointment in the practice for over forty years. At this present time, there are millions of boxes sold every years, keeping a great many hands at the laboratory employed to put it up. The Ointment does more wonders than any other known medicine or other man or beast.

DR. TANNER,
Dear Sir,

I was in the company of 1863 afflicted with the rheumatism. I was compelled to quit two times. I was compelled to send for your Ointment as you directed—the first box I opened began to get better. I am now able to walk without any cane and consider myself cured. I most heartily recommend your Ointment to the public as a good remedy for the Rheumatism.

Yours very truly,
Rev. Gideon Peterson.

Fresh Crackers every Morning
At 44, PER LB.,
AT WARD'S,
No. 5, Hunter St.

Mr. J. Briggs on Silks, Satin, and Paper Collars.

At the annual soiree of the Bradford Mechanics' Institution, the Robert Bruce, Bart., made a speech in which he referred to some of the cheap but nearly useless articles manufactured at the present day. He said that there were many ladies in that room who would be astonished when he told them that he had seen most beautiful silks—they must excuse the expression—offered at two shillings per yard. (Laughter.) If any article, then, could be pronounced as like silk, although it had not been allowed of silk in it, as to verify its spuriousness being detected by the general buyer, surely that reflected great credit upon the intelligence and skill that produced such an article. (Hear, hear.) Let them take another article and that would be his own hat. (Laughter.) He did not intend there for Robert Bruce to brush his headpiece with his sleeve, to be Cheap John, however. (Great Laughter.) That hat resembled a silk hat, and was looked upon as such; yet there was not a particle of silk in its whole formation. It was made from a weed which grew in the marshes of India called jute. It was a beautiful silk hat. He had worn it two years and it had only cost him 5s. (Laughter.) He was not ashamed to tell his price, nor did he think it a disgrace to any man to wear any kind of hat or other piece of dress, if it was decent, no matter what it cost. (Hear hear.) Besides, it was a fact that it stood the damp from the sea air better than the best silk hat that he could put upon his head. Well, as he had said, his hat was made from jute, that nasty article which they spoke and sang with. (Laughter.) He had a pride in wearing that hat, and for this reason: it had given three times as much employment as the manufacture of a silk hat; it had given wages, it had given the means of living to many of his fellow creatures. (Cheers.) There was another article which he were deserving of their attention. Perhaps they would think he had dressed himself for the occasion. (Great laughter.) He would bet the young men present—the young dandies—(Laughter)—who liked to have a neat collar, that the one he wore was as good as, if not better than any one in the room. He did not believe there was a linen collar in the shire of Cumberland equal to his. It was only paper. (Laughter.) He paid 3d per dozen for these collars—(continued laughter,)—and he would like to know where he would get a dozen washed for 3d wholesale, dear of the material altogether. (Roars of laughter.) These collars, he knew from experience, remain clean for a longer time than the linen ones. A friend of his said to him one day—"I should like to see you out with your paper collar on, on a wet day?"—(Laughter.) He thought he would try the experiment, and consequently on the first wet day that came he went out to see how his collar would stand the rain. After being well wet, he returned home, and allowed the wet collar to dry on his neck. He then took it off and was astonished to find that it was almost as clean as when he first put it on. (Laughter.) Next day he put on a linen collar, and went out to put it to the same test as he had his paper collar. (Laughter.) When he returned and took it off, it was a shame to be seen. (Great Laughter.) Some people were apt to say—"The idea of wearing paper collars!" Why, this was a miserable vanity. He would wear anything that was decent if it answered his purpose. (Hear, hear.) If that cheap silk of which he had been speaking, looked so beautiful in ladies' dresses as the silk obtained from the scarce silkworm, was the lady who wore it not as respectably clothed as the one attired with the production of the worm? (Applause.)—London Paper.

PROSPECT OF SMUGGLING.

From the Montreal Gazette.

The Cabinet at Washington appears to perceive that the intended-to-be-prohibitive tariff now imposed on importations into the Federal ports will lend to extensive smuggling along the long frontier of Canada. They have, in fact, taken a step to prevent it by asking Congress to authorize the appointment of numerous Consuls in Canada. A list of places at which it is proposed to have them has already been published in our commercial column. But it is as well to repeat here that Mr. Seward has written a letter to the committee on commerce of the House of Representatives, in which their attention is called to amendments in the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation Bill, designed to secure the more efficient working of the Federal Consular system, and protect the revenue from smuggling through Canada—

"Authority is requested to appoint Consuls at Chicago, Cleveland, Erie, Goderich, Kingston, Port Sarnia, Preston, St. Lambert, Cornwall, Toronto, and Windsor, at salaries of fifteen hundred dollars each."

Mr. Seward further states—

"That he has reliable information from Canada, France, Switzerland, and even China, that arrangements are now in progress for shipping large quantities of silks, velvets and other rich goods to Canada, with the intention of attempting to smuggle them into the United States under the protective high tariff.

"Mr. Seward may probably go to the Chinese, but it may be doubted if the Federal government have in this matter discovered any honest nations unknown to the world, any more than they did in former days. But as surely as the mass of irredeemable paper in large quantities means inflation and depreciation of the value of the currency, so also a prohibitive tariff—a tariff meant to be prohibitive—and a long frontier, imply smuggling, and Canada cannot prevent it.

These circumstances will be likely to make Mr. Galt's task more easy, for he will have increased revenue from increased importations into Canada; but this, with the adjustment of the Militia duties which may be made, in view of the open sympathy in the adjoining States, will probably put our financial troubles out of, they history. We hope so. It is an ill-wind that blows no good.

A Runaway Story for Lawyers.

Mr. Martin was on his way to Annapolis, to attend the Supreme Court of the State.—A solitary passenger was in the Stage coach with him, and, as the weather was extremely cold, the occupants soon resorted to conversation to divert themselves from too much personality to the unpleasant nip. The gossip man knew Mr. Martin by sight and, as he was also a lawyer, the thread of talk began to spin itself on legal matters. "I am just entering on my career as a lawyer; can you tell me the secret of your great success?" "Why, you will give the true your experience, the key to distinction at the bar, I will——" "What?" asked Mr. Martin. "Why, sir, I will pay your expenses while you are at that Annapolis," replied the young disciple. "Done," responded Mr. Martin. "Stand to your bargain, now, and I'll furnish you with the great secret of my success as a lawyer." The young man consented. "Very Well," said Mr. Martin. "The whole reason of my success is contained in one little maxim, which I early laid down to guide me. "If you follow it you cannot fail to succeed. It is this—Always be sure of your evidence."

The listener was very attentive—smiled—threw himself back in a philosophic posture, and gave his brains to the analysis, in true lawyer practice, of Always be sure of your evidence. It was too cold a night for anything to be made pecuniarily out of the old man's wisdom, and so the promising adept in maxim-learning gave himself to Morpheus, and in stopping was knocking and pushing his way through the world by the all-powerful words, Always be sure of your evidence." The morning came, and Mr. Martin, with his practical student, took rooms at the best hotel of the city. The only thing peculiar to the hotel, in the eyes of the young man, was the fact that all the wine-bottles, and the et ceteras of fine living, seemed to recall very vividly the maxim about the evidence. The young man watched Mr. Martin. Wherever eating and drinking were concerned he was indeed a man to be watched, especially in the latter, as he was immoderately fond of the after dinner, after supper, after anything, toddy or wine. A few days were sufficient to show the incipient legalist that he would have to pay dearly for his lesson ledge. A week elapsed, and Mr. Martin was ready to return to Baltimore. Mr. Martin approached the coloured as the hackman. "The young man was a curious specimen," said Mr. Martin, "my young friend Mr.—will excuse my bill, agreeable to agreement. The young man said nothing, but looked everything. "He will attend to it, Mr. Clerk, as we have already had a definite understanding on the subject. He is pledged to pay my bills," repeated Mr. Martin. "Where's your evidence?" mockly asked the young man. "Evidence?" queried Mr. Martin. "Yes, sir," said the young man, as he complacently responded, "Always be sure, Mr. Martin—your evidence, Can you prove the bargain?" Mr. Martin saw the snare, and putting out his pocket-book paid the bill, and with great good humour, assured the young man, "You will do, sir, and can get through the world with your profession without any advice from me." The young man thought so too.

ENGLISH TOURISTS AND GERMAN BULLETS.—The special correspondent of the Times at the Danish headquarters at Sonderberg writes:—"A number of English amateurs are daily flocking upon us, all of them bent upon evincing their sovereign contempt of what are called the perils of war. Sentries are posted at the end of the bridges on the Sonderberg side to prevent civilians crossing over to Dybbol unless provided with a pass from headquarters. The officers of the staff are, however, liberal to a fault, and they hardly ever dream of refusing a card to any person, especially to an Englishman, applying for it. Armed with that talisman, our fun-loving tourist walk up to the wind-mill, rummage about from fort to fort, jump upon parapets crush under block-houses, stroll on the glacis, seeking the most advantageous position to view the exchange of iron projectiles—to anger for the time as if it were a game of cricket or football. Their recklessness of their daring and the oddity of their travelling costume puzzle the officers, and afford unspeakable amusement to the men. One of these strangers—a youth of noble blood and mien fresh from Oxford, and in a suit of buff leather cap-a-pie—has been studying Robinson Crusoe; and his invisible complexion—a stalwart fellow, up to everything—goes, of course, by the name of his man Friday. There was a mere boy of 17 the other day who had perched himself on the very top of Alsen Dybbol, windmill to see the fun, and no entreaty or expostulation could induce him to alight from his elevated station.

A NOT FOR GREECE.—Graduates.—Michael Murphy, President of the Hibernian Society, Toronto, who rendered his name infamous throughout Canada, by his irrepressible harangues on St. Patrick's day, in '63 and '64, was in Hamilton during the last election, assisting the Grits to defeat Mr. McElroy.—How do they like their ally? If it is said to support a Ministry with Cartier in it, how will they take to their loving embrace the Fenian Murphy, as a worthy associate whom he will support them?—Brantford Courier.

We feel the most profound pleasure in informing our well-informed contemporary, that Mr. Michael Murphy was here as Mr. Buchanan's agent, and right heartily he worked for him. As who "rendered his name infamous throughout Canada by his irrepressible harangues," came expressly from Toronto to secure the election of the President of the Council. The Fenian, Murphy, and the Abolitionist, Isaac Buchanan, were in loving embrace. How do you like the company you have got into super-loyal Cobden?—Hamilton Times.

SIX PATOR EXPLOITS.

On Saturday morning last, while a gentleman officer of the volunteer corps was awaiting the arrival of a train at the Union depot, his fashionable conversation with a son of Mars who was lounging around there, in the muddy waters of the Don called into heaved almost at their feet, it was quite natural that their conversation should take an aquatic turn. Pompey proclaimed to be a great swimmer, a perfect Weedy ocean he said, though his movements in the water, classical enough, but he quite as graceful as that unique bird. He exhibited at great length not only upon his cork-like proclivities in the water, but also protesting that he could dive like a duck, and "float up bottom" in thirty feet of water. Being amused with the fellow's conversation, and hoping to have a good joke out of him, the gallant officer of volunteers offered to bet Pompey twenty dollars that he dare not spring into the Bay off the top of a lamp-post standing on the edge of the Esplanade. "Done," said Pompey, making for the lamp-post, "by gosh, the stakes will soon lighten you of five twenty dollars, sar no mistake." "Well up with your stumpy," said the gallant officer of volunteers. Here was a poser for Pompey; he was without the necessary funds. He paused, looked down for a moment and set his fingers circulating through his woolly pate, as if to rub up an idea. "Oh, I have it," he exclaimed, "we are both gemmen, you can just book it, and we'll bet on honour." The gallant officer of volunteers accordingly booked the bet, as Pompey mounted the lamp-post, to take the leap. Poising himself for an instant on the top, he sang out "dem twenty dollars is mine," and in he went, head first, and for a moment was lost to view. He soon, however, appeared on the surface, puffing, blowing, and floundering like a porpoise, and, striking out boldly for the Esplanade, he was in a few minutes on terra firma again. Wet, dripping, and shivering with the cold, he advanced to the "gallant officer of volunteers" to receive his twenty dollars, but, instead of getting it, he was laughed at for his folly. He coaxed, entreated and threatened, but still he received it not, and as a last resource, went to the police authorities for the purpose of having the "gallant officer" arrested. The poor fellow, however, was astonished to find that he could not collect the bet in that way, and that, as it was one of honour, it could only be settled between himself and the other "gentleman" Pompey, after his mighty leap and cold dooking, has not yet received his money, as dunners now that he will never but on honour again, especially with a gallant officer of volunteers."—Globe.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

The Memphis Bulletin relates the following touching incident:

On Tuesday last, April 5, the widow of Major Booth, the late commander at Fort Pillow, arrived at Fort Pickering, below this city, Col. Jackson of the 6th U. S. heavy artillery had his regiment formed in line for her reception. In front of its center stood fourteen men, as fine, brave fellows as tread the earth. They were the remnant of the first battalion of the regiment now drawn up—all who had escaped the fiendish scenes of Fort Pillow, scenes that have stamped yet deeper blackness on the infamous brow of treason.

Mrs. Booth came forward. In her hand she bore a flag, red and clotted with human blood. She took a position in front of the fourteen heroes, so lately under her deceased husband's command.

The ranks before her observed a silence that was full of solemnity. Many a hardy face showed by twitching lids and humid eyes how the sight of the bereaved lady touched bosoms that could meet steel, and drew on the fountain of tears that had remained dry even amid the pitcons sights witnessed on the battle-field after a fierce action.

Turning to the men before her, she said:—

Boys.—I have just come from a visit to the hospital at Mound City. There I saw your comrades; wounded at the bloody struggle in Fort Pillow. There I found this flag—you recognize it. One of your comrades saved it from the insulting touch of traitors at Fort Pillow!

I have given to my country all I have to give—my husband—such a gift! Yet I have freely given him for freedom and my country.

Next my husband's cold remains, the best dearest object left me in the world is this flag—the flag that waved in proud defiance over the works of Fort Pillow!

Soldiers! this flag I give to you, knowing that you will ever remember the last words of my noble husband:—"Never surrender the flag to traitors!"

Col. Jackson then received from her hand, in behalf of his command, the blood-stained flag. He called upon the regiment to receive it as such a gift ought to be received. At that call he and every man of the regiment fell upon their knees, and, solemnly appealing to the God of battles, each one swore to avenge their brave and fallen comrades, and never—never to surrender the flag to traitors!

A WARM RECEPTION.—A couple belonging to that portion of Port Dalhousie known as Michigan, were married a few days ago, and held the wedding festivities in two places—one for music, dancing and courting, and the other for eating, drinking whiskey and swearing. The bride and groom enjoyed themselves among the assembled company "until daylight in the morning," when the latter thought he would call upon his respected father for his blessing. He went, and on his entering the door of the parental domicile was met by the salutation of "Begone, ye spalpeen! and never darken my door again." The old man rising at the same time, and lifting a tea kettle off the stove, where it had been simmering and boiling for some time, poured the boiling water down his son's neck and breast, scalding him in a most dangerous manner. The old man has absconded, and the son is recovering.

FROM QUEBEC.

QUEBEC, May 10.

The debate of last night is regarded as having been exceedingly damaging to the Government. It will scarcely be denied that the statement made by Mr. Galt in the Shawenegan speech, in the name of the late Government, that their successors found no seed grain for the destitute settlers of Parliament, was the reverse of the truth. His statement on that memorable occasion about the $65,000 advanced to the county of Missisquoi, and repeated by Mr. McGee, at Berlin, was also not exactly borne out by the very sincere old gentleman, who is the member for that county, and who, in the course of his remarks, said he was not ashamed to confess that he had been a clergyman, had been in the Southland was obliged to leave by reason of affairs in that portion of the Church; he had arrived in Canada and endeavored to get work, but was unsuccessful, having spent all his money, and became nearly destitute. On Friday both Coleman and his wife disappeared from the hotel, and upon investigating a trunk left in their room, Mr. Strong discovered that many articles had been abstracted, and that the trunk was entirely empty. Search for the delinquent was unavailing. Coleman is a thick-set man, 35 or 40 years of age, bushed face, red whiskers, and five feet eight or nine inches high; the partner of his joys and sorrow is also heavily built. The couple should be looked after.—Free Press.

AN IMPOSTER.

About a week since a man and woman arrived in this city, and went to Strong's Hotel, registering themselves as Mr. Mrs. Coleman and wife. Coleman soon obtained he had a letter of recommendation from the Rev. Mr. Bowman of Peterborough, formerly of St. Thomas, and that he had come to this city to solicit subscriptions with Mr. Chester Hunt. Mr. Strong very naturally credited his story, and thought no more about the matter; Coleman, however, with his letter of introduction, visited the Bishop of Huron, also Mr. W. Elliot, Mr. E. Adams, and several others, obtaining from the various parts small sums of money which he had was to enable him to pay his board at the hotel. The St. George's Society also gave him money, and to one and all he told the same story of his troubles; he had been a clergyman, had been in the South, and was obliged to leave by reason of affairs in that portion of the Church; he had arrived in Canada and endeavored to get work, but was unsuccessful, having spent all his money, and became nearly destitute. On Friday both Coleman and his wife disappeared from the hotel, and upon investigating a trunk left in their room, Mr. Strong discovered that many articles had been abstracted, and that the trunk was entirely empty. Search for the delinquent was unavailing. Coleman is a thick-set man, 35 or 40 years of age, bushed face, red whiskers, and five feet eight or nine inches high; the partner of his joys and sorrow is also heavily built. The couple should be looked after.—Free Press.

The Edinburgh correspondent of a northern contemporary gives the following gossip about Prince Alfred, who has just left that city:—"Whether or not it is true that Prince Alfred, as Lord Brougham remarked at the last Social Science Congress, is one of the best of princes, he has become an immense favourite among the Modern Athenians, some of whom have gone the length of seeking locks of his hair from the barber who usually had the honour of cropping his Royal Highness. Like his elder brother, the Prince is a heavy smoker. Nothing, in fact, seems to please him better than a good pipe of tobacco and a chat with two or three cheerful companions. He is also of a mechanical cast of mind, and in his smoking room at Holyrood he has fitted up a turning lathe. In photography he is remarkably proficient, having imbibed a strong relish for it from his mother, who is known to be practically conversant with the art, and to have instructed her family in its details. His Royal Highness is equally expert on the violin and harmonium. One incident illustrating a highly favorable trait of the Prince's character must not be omitted. Some time ago, as will be remembered, one of his eyes was accidentally blackened while he was playing at racket. The poor fellow who threw the ball manifested extreme, and no doubt, sincere sorrow for the occurrence, but the despondency gave way to hearty admiration when the Prince good humouredly asked him to dinner at Holyrood Palace next day, in order to lighten the tedium of his temporary imprisonment."

TAKEN AT HIS WORD.—Cromwell was thinking of marrying his daughter to a wealthy Gloucestershire gentleman, when he was led to believe that one of his own chaplains, Mr. Jeremy White, a young man of pleasing manners, was secretly paying his addresses to the Lady Frances, who was far from discouraging his attentions. Entering his daughter's room one day, the Protector caught White on his knees kissing the lady's hand. "What is the meaning of this?" he demanded. "May it please your Highness," replied White, with great, but fatal, presence of mind, pointing to one of the lady's maids who happened to be in the room, "I have long courted that young gentlewoman and cannot prevail; I was, therefore, praying her ladyship to intercede for me." "Why do you refuse the honour Mr. White would do you?" said Cromwell to the young woman. "He is my friend, and I expect you should treat him as such." "If Mr. White intends me that honor," answered the woman with a low curtsey, "I shall not be against him." "Do you hear that?" said Cromwell. "Let Goodwin White's business shall be done before I go out of the room." Goodwin, the chaplain, arrived, and White, unable to keep out of the forlorn, and quite turned the table upon Mr. McGee. To-day the Ministerialists do not conceal their chagrin at the pitiable exhibition made by Mr. McGee last night.

KILLINGSOATH IN THE HOUSE.

EXPURGATED EDITION PARAGRAPH IN THE MINISTERIAL JOURNALS.

"In our Canadian Parliament much time is generally wasted in making and replying to personal attacks, it is a disgrace to our Legislature. In no other business does the old adage that time is money hold better than it does here—every hour spent in this manner is said to cost over a thousand dollars. How many thousand dollars worth of hard earned money must the Honorable gentlemen waste in a year. They spend time in making the grossest personal attacks. During last week the Ministerial party have been enjoying themselves poking mud at their opponents, and every Ministerial paper was full of wondrous revelations and disgraceful discoveries. At last they have been brought up in the House. They seemed exceedingly plausible; knowing the character of the men attacked, we forbore to notice them, certain they would have fullest refutation all in good time. They have had it now: to every one of their abusive attacks of the Ministerial party there does not seem to have been the slightest foundation in fact. Even the Hon'ble. JOHN A. MACDONALD felt ashamed of his party for once, and stated in his place in the House that it was folly to waste the time of the House on them; he believed they were untrue. Mr. McGEE seems to be in his element only when conducting some dirty warfare of this sort; he scarcely ever rises in the House, no matter what the subject he has in hand may be, but he either begins or ends by abusing some one. We must give Messrs. MACDONALD, CARTIER and GALT great credit if they are able to conduct the business of the country much longer;—instead of strength their confidence must be a weakness to them. Not only have they all the business of the House to conduct themselves, but they have to keep a strict watch over their various brethren. They have to pull Mr. BUCHANAN by the coat tail to keep him in his seat lest he makes a fool of himself, and Mr. MACDONALD has to send notes to Mr. McGEE to stop him when he gets personal.

It may suit the tone of such a paper as the Leader to manufacture sensation paragraphs to which the Editor well knows no one will be fool enough to reply, and which we feel certain no one believes; but for so-called gentlemen to rise in their places in the House and repeat these stories, and quote the Leader as their authority seems extremely silly. If they do not know enough of the facts without resorting to such a source for information, they would be better to hold their tongues. In reporting these attacks the Ministerial journals are in the habit of giving all the abusive portions and garbling and distorting, or altogether omitting the refutation. Out of a dozen cases that have occurred last week, we select the following:—

The Leader under date May 9th or 9th, makes the announcement with a sensation heading "That the Honorable George Brown was accused of having accepted a large lot of land from the late Government for the part he took in sustaining it and making matters as pleasant as possible, with regard to Representation by Population." Of this the Globe wisely took no notice. Indignant that there is not notice taken of the fabrication, the Leader, May 11th, returns to the attack in the following manner:—

"MR. BROWN AND THE LATE GOVERNMENT.—A very serious charge against Mr. Brown was made by our Quebec correspondent a few days ago. He was accused of having accepted a large lot of land from the late Government for the part he took in sustaining it, and making matters as pleasant as possible with regard to Representation by Population. Mr. Brown was in Toronto when the charge appeared in these columns; and yet his Journal yesterday had not a word to say about it. He cannot shirk the matter in this way, we can assure him. Perhaps it was the revelations connected with this lot of land that caused Mr. Brown to hurry off to the Seat of Government in such a hurry. But we submit that he should not have left Toronto without some reference to the subject. The accusation is easy of treatment. A simple "yes" or "no" would suffice. Mr. Brown's reticence is certainly not much in his favor. But if he is determined to be silent there are others who will not."

The Globe was still silent—apparently feeling that the attacks of the Ministerial journal were not worth replying to. The Hon. Mr. McDOUGALL, the late Crown Land Commissioner, however, thinking that his reputation was at stake, as the transaction could not take place without his knowledge, brought the matter before the House, when the falsity of the Leader's statements were fully and fairly proven. We leave the Globe hower, to speak for itself here:—

"The Government organ in this city seems to be under the impression that it is our duty to refute all the slanders which it sees afloat, and, that when we allow its stories to pass unnoticed, it is entitled to jump at the conclusions that they are untrue. We must dissent from this doctrine. It would impose a great deal of trouble upon us, and at the same time serve no good purpose, to be constantly exposing the Leader's fabrications. Such an expose may be well enough once in a while, but we cannot think of laying the Globe under an obligation to take up and refute all the inventions which day by day find their way into the editorial columns of the York Roads newspaper. On Monday last, that journal had a long despatch from its special correspondent at Quebec, making accusations of jobbing in the gold-bearing and other lands, against Mr. McDougall, the late Commissioner of Crown Lands. The story was so manifestly a fabrication that we deemed it entirely unworthy of notice. When the Leader reached Quebec, however, Mr. McDougall thought it worth while to reply fully and specifically to all the charges contained in the "sensation" dispatch, and in a few minutes so completely answered all the accusations brought by Mr. Beaty's paper, that even Mr. John A. Macdonald professed himself satisfied. One might have supposed that that would have silenced even the editor of the Leader. But no, in yesterday's paper he has the impudence to go back upon one of the charges made on Monday, and that, too, a charge at the mention of which the House literally laughed—in this style:—

"Mr. Beaty's Despatch.—Mr. McDougall, in making explanations in the House, appeared to his missing speech, referred to the charge made against him in the Government organ, that he, as a member of the Government, had received a lot of land from the late Government for the part he took in sustaining it, and making matters as pleasant as possible with regard to Representation by Population. Mr. Brown was in Toronto when the charge appeared in these columns; and yet his Journal yesterday had not a word to say about it. He cannot shirk the matter in this way, we can assure him. Perhaps it was the revelations connected with this lot of land that caused Mr. Brown to hurry off to the Seat of Government in such a hurry. But we submit that he should not have left Toronto without some reference to the subject. The accusation is easy of treatment. A simple "yes" or "no" would suffice. Mr. Brown's reticence is certainly not much in his favor. But if he is determined to be silent there are others who will not."

Since writing the above we learn that the Government have been sustained by a majority of two.

PARLIAMENTARY GOOD SHOT.—Many persons may not be aware that there even was such an institution. There was, but it is a thing of the past. On the 13th inst. Parliament voted that it was "inexpedient to permit the sale of intoxicating liquors within "its precincts." This resolve, to which there were but four opponents, will meet the approbation of the country. This motion met considerable opposition. Many of the Members cannot do without their drams. Mr. McConkey who introduced the motion said while he had held a seat in Parliament he had seen the effects of the saloon not confined to the lower regions, but exhibited even in this chamber. The speaker said that at the beginning of the session he had consulted leading members of the House on the subject. Their opinion was, especially as divisions were very close, that it was necessary to have refreshment rooms on the premises. Otherwise there would be a constant searching for members in all the hotels and boarding houses throughout the city, and perhaps the fall of a ministry might be caused by the closing of the saloon.

MAN DROWNED.—On Monday evening a man named FRANCIS DRAKE was drowned at the Locks, at the foot of Little Lake. It seems that Drake had been fishing with a dip-net from the pier and had been dragged in by the current. He was a good swimmer, but the strong current carried him rapidly down. On hearing his cries some of the workmen in the vicinity set off to his rescue in a canoe, but he sank when they were only a short distance from him. The body has not been recovered. Drake was a young man, unmarried.

NARROW ESCAPE.

On Saturday last, a crib of timber, on which were three of the Messrs. Strickland's broke up at the foot of Hunter street, Messrs. Strickland and one of the workmen were washed off. Mr. Edward Strickland got on the crib and still holds on for his life, but could land just above the bridge. One poor fellow who was washed off could not swim, and was near meeting a watery grave. Fortunately, Mr. Geo. Strickland saw him, and caught him by the hair of the head just as he was sinking. By great exertion he kept him afloat till he secured a piece of the wreck, and flung him across it. On nearing the pier at the bridge, Mr. Strickland managed to get a hold of it and land the half-drowned man. Mr. Strickland is a good swimmer and would have had no difficulty in saving himself, but with the exertion necessary to save the half-drowned man, he was considerably exhausted. Had not the piece of wreck on which he was laid neared the pier of the bridge, it would have been almost impossible for Mr. Strickland to save the poor fellow. There was a considerable amount of rolling stuff on the crib which was all lost.

BOY DROWNED.

We feel sorry to have to record so many accidents by drowning, and we have now to add the death of a little boy. On Sabbath last a son of Wm. McGregor's Cooper, Ashburnham, in company with his father and one of the men in his employ, had gone out to search for a cow that had strayed. The little fellow crossed some logs that spanned a small creek near the Locks, called Whitlow's creek, and went down one side in search of the cow whilst his father and the man went down the other. They met on opposite sides of the mouth of the creek, where the boy called across to his father that the cow was not on that side, and that he would return to the logs and cross over to join them. Mr. McGregor sat down to wait his coming over, but thinking him long of coming, went up to look for him. He was not to be seen. The anxious father then called aloud repeatedly, and at last crossed over in search of his son. No trace of him could be found. There is no doubt but that the poor little fellow fell into the creek when crossing over to join his father. He was about twelve years of age.

QUEEN'S BIRTH-DAY.

Tuesday first, the 24th instant, will be a holiday. We are glad that Peterborough is not to be behind other towns in the Province in the celebration of the day. Our Gracious Sovereign deserves all honor at our hands. The Fire Company, as will be seen by an advertisement, are to make a demonstration. They are a thoroughly efficient organization—and no doubt their proceedings will be well worth witnessing. The Volunteers, too, will be out in force. We hope the day may be favorable.

Musical and Literary Re-union.

A grand entertainment in aid of the Building Fund of the First Presbyterian Church here, will be held about the 1st of June.—Every exertion is being made to make the proceedings as entertaining as possible. A large amount of musical talent has been volunteered, and readings and recitations will vary the proceedings. The building is an ornament to the town, and we hope the Re-union will be largely attended.

MR. COLWELL has been very ill and was unable to be present in the House for some days. We learn that he is somewhat better and has again been attending to his duties.

MESSRS. MILLAR & BERTRAM do not require any notice from us. They are well known;—their stock is complete in every department. From their intimate knowledge of the wholesale markets, they have every advantage in buying and consequently can sell cheap.

ARRIVAL OF THE "CAVALIER."—For the information of his numerous friends in the County of Peterborough, we may mention that Captain Masson, of Asphodel, arrived at Quebec on Saturday last. His ship, the Cavalier, is said to be a very fine one.

THE LATE SAVAGE ASSAULT.—We learn on inquiry that Munro, the wounded man, is doing well, and will soon be all right again. James Wrighton and the other party charged with the assault have been sent for trial to the Quarter Sessions. They are out on bail of $200 each.

GLASGOW WAREHOUSE.—Mr. Erskine has removed to new premises larger and more convenient. His stock of goods is large and well selected, and we know he sells as cheap, if not cheaper than any other house in town.—Parties giving him a call once will be sure to go back again. We can honestly recommend Mr. Erskine to the notice of our Readers.

CANADIAN CLOTHES WRINGER.—Mr. Bletcher advertises the above. It is extremely simple, and very little liable to get out of order; and whilst doing his work is well as any in the Market, is much cheaper than any other. Mr. Bletcher, we understand, manufactures them himself, and consequently can repair them if anything goes wrong—a very important item. Encourage home manufacture.

FIRE.—On Thursday evening about nine o'clock the stables and out-houses in the rear of Mr. Hartley's house were discovered to be on fire. Being wholly of wood and the fire having made a fair start before it was observed they were totally consumed.—By great exertion Mr. Hartley's house was saved, the back part of it having been on fire once or twice. A liberal supply of wet quilts and blankets vigorously applied however, prevented the flames from spreading. There is no doubt but this also was the work of an incendiary. This is the fourth or fifth attempt that has been made to burn down the houses on this part of the hill. On Saturday a Coroner's inquest was held by Dr. Hartley, assisted by a most respectable and intelligent jury to try to discover something as to the origin of the fire. Unfortunately they were unsuccessful. The matter ought not to be allowed to rest—something ought to be done not only to discover who the guilty parties are, but also to bring them to punishment. We cannot consider of a more atrocious crime than wilful fire-raising. The murderer can always count his victims; the incendiary never knows how much evil his fiendish deed may accomplish.

AMERICAN WAR.

During the past few weeks there have been severe contests going on between the Federals and the Confederates. The casualties of each killed and wounded on both sides is very large—probably over 100,000. The Southern army-accounts have the best of it, but still more reliable accounts are received it would be impossible to give a continued account with any degree of accuracy. The fighting has lasted for about a fortnight. GRANT and LEE alternately making the attacks, as might have been expected, the greatest excitement prevails in the North. The gigantic nature of the struggle involves so many interests that the whole world may be said to be looking on with bated breath. Up to the present moment no very considerable success has been gained by either side. Were the telegrams reliable, the North has achieved a tremendous conquest; but unfortunately no reliance can be placed on the dispatches.—We will therefore have to wait for a week or perhaps a month before we can judge of the effect of the present tremendous struggle.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—Yesterday forenoon, a young man named John Lee, carpenter, fell from one of the scaffolds in the interior of the new tower at the east of the Town Hall. He must have fallen a distance of over 40 ft. Fortunately his fall was partially broken by some of the beams inside the tower. He is we fear seriously injured, and now lies dangerously ill.

MAD DROWNED.—The river this spring has been unusually high, and consequently the running of rafts from Lakefield down has been very difficult. We cannot remember to have seen so many wrecks passing the bridge for many years as there is this season. On Saturday, when one of the cribs was going over the slide called Bird's slide, a poor unfortunate fellow was washed off and drowned. We have not been able to learn his name. He was unmarried.

SMITH COUNCIL.

Smith, May 16th, 1864.

The Council met as a Court of Revision on the Assessment Roll.

An Appeal was presented and read from Andrew Daly, complaining of an overcharge on his land. After hearing the case, the court confirmed the Assessment.

Also, an Appeal from Thos. Poole, complaining of an overcharge on land. The Appellant did not appear.

Application was made by Anson Sperry Wm. Snyder, and John Carnegie for a reduction in the Assessment of their property at Blythe Mills, the same having been destroyed by fire. The following reductions were made:—Anson Sperry from $1,900 to $200, Wm. Snyder from $5,200 to $2,200, and John Carnegie from $3,200 to $1,200.

A Petition was presented from Thomas McDougall, School Teacher, stating that he was in reduced circumstances, and praying that the assessment on his salary be rescinded. The prayer of the petition was granted.

Application was made by James Elliott to have the Assessment of the West half lot No. 16, in the 3rd concession of Smith, added to the assessment of his property, he having rented the same since the Assessor took the Assessment. The application granted.

Other applications were made for alterations in the Assessment Roll, but as the parties interested not being present, the Court adjourned until the 30th inst.

The members then went into Council, and the minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed.

Petitions received and read:—Of Geo. Millard and others, praying for an alteration in School Section No. 4, in the Township of Smith. Petition laid over.—Of James Donnelly and others, praying that the money expended by them in the survey of the allowance for road between lots 18 and 19, in the 5th and 6th concessions of Smith, be refunded. Petition not entertained.

A By-law was passed to close up and dispose of the original allowance for road between lots 18 and 19 in the 11th concession of Smith; and also a By-law to establish a new line of road in lieu thereof.

A new road division was established in the 14th concession line, and Charles Millage appointed overseer of the same.

James Brown made application to perform his Statute Labour on Road Division No. 19, as usual. The application granted.

The undermentioned sums were granted for the relief of the following indigent persons, viz:—Wm. Adams, $10, Widow Freeburn $8, and Widow Staples, $5.

T. M. Fairbairn's bill of costs for defending and arguing in Quarter Sessions the case of appeal made by Andrew Wilson from Magistrate's decision, was presented and read, amounting to $12. The Reeve was directed to issue his order on the Treasurer for the same.

The Clerk was directed to notify Harvey Pearson to remove his fence from off the 16th concession line.

Application was made by Mr. Hilliard to the Council to pass a By-law to close up and vest in Wm. Snyder the original allowance for road between the 2nd and 3rd concessions of Smith, extending from the eastern limit of the Road between 16 and 19 to the north-western limit of the old River Road established by Quarter Sessions. Also, that part of the original allowance for Road between lots 14 and 19, extending from the southern limit of the present travelled River Road to the River Otonabee.—And stated that said Wm Snyder would vest in the Council all that parcel of land from the north-western boundary of the present travelled River Road to the north-western boundary of the old River Road in lieu thereof.

MILITARY FAILURES.

At the beginning of the war, we gave a fair trial to the policy of telling the whole truth with regard to military error, blunders and failures, exposing imbecility, cowardice and treachery, without fear or favor; and we abandoned that course only after subsequent proof had been afforded that it was more likely to shake down the government than to uphold and hearten on to triumph.—N. Y. Tribune.

During the past ten days, copies of the most bloody battles that history records have been sent over the telegraph wires. Could we believe half we read—not less than 200,000 men have either been killed, wounded, or taken prisoners, in the two armies in Virginia within ten days. They are still fighting, and the loss on each side mounts on up (so says the reports) to 25,000 per diem. We hope for the sake of suffering humanity that these reports are much exaggerated. That above from the Tribune would give credence to the belief that they are so.

....The number of landlords in France in 1851 was 7,545,000, or about one-fourth of the population. The land was divided into one hundred and twenty-six millions of small fields or farms. One half of the owners were cultivators of property, and these distributed from fourteen millions of the remainder did not occupy in taxes paid by them more than one tax, or about a cent. per head. Since 1837 these sub-divisions of property have increased.

PRESS AGENCY OF MONTGOMERY.—Very many persons seem to forget that a newspaper will not be forwarded unless prepaid except it comes direct from the office of publication. Dozens of papers are daily slipped into the downstairs hands of the postmaster, which are immediately consigned to the waste-basket, and never reach their destination. The public will please take notice of this.

In only 850 of these cases was there any dividend for the benefit of creditors. In 6,910 instances there was not collected from the assets one farthing in the pound. Only 154 applications were refused on the ground of fraud. In 1863 the adjudications were less, namely 8,470, and 226 cases produced a dividend.

....In the House of Commons on the 29th ult., Mr. Disraeli asked if any member of the Government could say when the conference which met on the 25th was to assemble again. Sir George Grey said the conference had not been adjourned sine die, but no day had been fixed for the next meeting, and he could not say where it would take place, nor could he state the cause of the adjournment. The London Times of the 30th ult., greatly fears that the result of the conference will be the triumph of the men of action over the men of words, and the overthrow of the just policy of the Western Powers. The London Daily News utters similar fears. The London Morning Post takes an opposite view, and believes the interests of Denmark will be carefully protected in the conference by France and England.

....Last Monday, a little boy seven years old, son of Mr. Pendergast, Pittsburg, undertook to separate two cocks that were fighting in the yard; while doing so one of the birds struck him over the eye with his spur, leaving a portion of it in the wound. On Wednesday last the wound became painful, it was examined and the piece of spur discovered and removed; but immediately afterwards the boy was taken ill, and in about two hours died. It appears that the spur had penetrated into the brain.—Kingston Whig.

A QUESTIONABLE PRACTICE.—Quite a number of affidavits were yesterday read in the House by various members who had been absent from their respective Committees. The excuses offered sounded sometimes very odd, and were enough to make a mummy smile. I question, however, whether the rule that requires that these statements should be made under oath, is not calculated to have a demoralizing effect, and do more harm than good. When oaths are exacted upon very trifling occasions, the solemnity which attaches to them disappears, and is apt to lead to moral, if not legal, perjury. Quebec Cor. of the Kingston Whig.

CAUTION TO COMPOSITORS.—An incident occured in a London office (England), a few weeks since, showing the absolute necessity of cleanliness in the habits of compositors. A lad between 17 and 18, in good health, being annoyed by the irritation of a large pimple or boil, on the lower side of his face, pinched it, and picked it with the thumb and forefinger of his right hand, on which some dust from new type had accumulated. Finding that the pain of the boil continued, frequent poultices were applied. His face, in spite of unceasing poulticing and fomentations, became rapidly swelled to extraordinary dimensions, ulcers formed in his mouth, and in less than three days he died. His medical attendants declared his death to be caused by carbuncle, no doubt very much aggravated by the poison infused into the new type.

A DEAD LOCK IN COURT.—The British Colonist, Vancouver's Island, tells the following story:—An amusing scene occurred in the Supreme Court yesterday. During an elaborate and lengthy display of forensic eloquence by one of the learned counsel in case before the Court, it was suddenly discovered that the gentleman was "wasting his sweetness on the desert air," as there was no jury. Two of the "specials" doubtless finding the address rather dry, quietly slipped out, and started for the adjacent brewery to quench their thirst in a glass of "Cooper and Perkins' best." The proceedings, of course, were at once arrested, and the Sheriff and the Attorneys on the case were dispatched in quest of the runaways, who were speedily brought in, looking mightily sophished after their flutterings.

QUEBEC, May, 5.—A meeting of the Upper Canada Liberals, of both Houses, was held to-day at Mr. McDougall's house, and was very largely attended. A delegation from the Lower Canada Opposition was also present. It was unanimously resolved to take the earliest opportunity of testing whether the Ministry possesses the confidence of the House. A committee was appointed to prepare a resolution to be proposed for that purpose. For the information of the Ministerial press, which is now greatly exercised upon the question of the Opposition leadership, it may be as well to mention that the subject was not discussed or even moved. The opposition will take its own time and way of settling the details of its own organization.

Although Mr. Irvine's Bill, which was voted on this afternoon, did not raise any party question, the division upon it was, by a sort of tacit consent, made almost entirely a party vote—the opposition voting with Mr. Huot, and Ministers and their friends with Mr. Irvine. It was observed that Messrs. Sylvain, Cauchon, and Rhéaume, with others names the Ministerialists have recently been making very free, acted with Mr. Huot. Mistakes did not double all confortable when the numbers were announced. Their minority of two on the vote against the Government for withdrawing the ballot which may be expected when a strict party vote is taken.—Quebec Cor. of Globe.

....An ingenious Yankee has recently invented a weapon that may be inserted in the handle of a lady's parasol, and will drive a ball through an inch and a half plank at a distance of two yards. Such a weapon would be useful in the hands of a timid female in the event of a sudden attack by a bull.

Should the fattening of cattle continue to keep pace with the increase of late years, the consumption of meat in England will soon require the services of 100 oxen and seven times the number of sheep now employed in that district of England alone, while their number is constantly on the increase.

....WILL NOT FIGHT.—It is said that Queen Victoria, in the exercise of the Royal prerogative of war or peace-making, has lately assured both Lord Palmerston and Earl Derby that no crowned chief living has so decided war against her own children and other kin in Germany. Hence, it is said, all the English Parliamentary debates amount to a declaration of war in favor of Denmark.

NEW YORK, May 11.—A correspondent of the Herald, writing from Washington, on Monday, says:—We have been out six days, and been hard fighting continuously. We have eaten and read up a very large proportion of the supplies we took with us. Our losses have been terrible, probably as follows: killed, 5,000; wounded, 18,000; missing, 6,000—total, 27,000.

AMERICAN FLAX.—We saw a couple of very good lands of flax straw in town to-day. On enquiry, we learned that a farmer from the other side of the Serpentine Bridge brought it in for the flax cotton mills in our town. He had some eight or ten more loads to bring for which he receives $16 a ton. This price has induced him to sow a large breadth this spring, and many of his neighbors are doing the same. It is to be hoped that the farmers in that vicinity will not allow our friends across the border to outstrip them in this new enterprise.—St. Catharine's Post.

THE DELAY OF TRAINS.—The trains on Grand Trunk East have lately been delayed occasioned by several "breaks" on the line east of Cobourg. We believe that the track is washed away in no less than four places between Cobourg and Belleville. Two men, it is said, who were raising the stone of a dam near Cobourg were drowned whilst engaged in the work, and another colored man who was also drowned. Large numbers of men are busily engaged at the various branches making the track passable for trains.

ACCIDENT CAUSED BY CHLOROFORM.—A singular accident occurred in Cleveland, Ohio, a few days ago. An old gentleman was passing a couple of ladies on the sidewalk, when his foot caught in the crinoline of one of them and he fell backward, striking his head violently against the bottom of a lamp post, laying open his scalp and stunning him. He was taken into a neighboring dwelling-house and his wound dressed. It was feared that his skull was fractured by the blow, but the injuries proved not to be dangerous, though, in view of his age, serious results might have been feared.

A SINGULAR CASE.—A man named Chas. Fisher attempted to commit suicide in North Fifth-street, near Wreath, Brooklyn, E. D., on Sunday evening. His brother-in-law, William Smith, was dying of wounds received in the service, and this so worked upon the mind of Fisher that he seized a pistol, and while standing at the bedside of the dying man, endeavoured to blow his own brains out. He was seized by a cousin named Corey, and in the struggle for possession of the weapon, the latter received the contents in the right side. The wound was slight. Meanwhile Smith had ceased to breathe.—New York News, 10th.

SPECIAL BUSINESS NOTICE.—Mr. John A. Macdonald, Cabinet Maker, Parliament Buildings, Quebec, begs to inform the public generally, that his establishment is now open for the Spring trade, and from his long experience and acknowledged taste and ability hopes that his efforts may meet with a liberal share of public support. All sorts of Cabinet ware kept constantly on hand—jobbing done to suit customers—reciprocally using his motto, he will, in turn, extend his patronage to those who may favor him with their custom. The public will do well to inspect his stock before going elsewhere.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—Yesterday afternoon, a poor little boy, named Mansbey, was drowned in the southern section of the river Thames under peculiar circumstances. The youth, we learn, was encroaching upon some land, when the owner thereof chased him, and, in endeavoring to escape, the boy fell into the river and was drowned. Great efforts were made to secure the body, but all exertions, up to a late hour last night, proved fruitless. The parents of the unfortunate boy reside on Bathurst street, and have sustained a severe shock by the unexpected loss of their child. Should the story, relative to a man having frightened Mansbey into the river, prove true, the rash offender deserves severe punishment, unless he can show a more potent cause for having chased the youth, than that he was merely waking over his land.—London Free Press.

....The Richmond Examiner has the following:—The President and his family have just met with a great affliction in the sudden and violent death of Joseph E. Davis, second son of the President, about four years old. He fell from the east portico on Saturday afternoon, between three and four o'clock a distance of fully fifteen feet, fracturing his hip and injuring his head. Mr. Davis and his wife were absent from the mansion at the time of the accident, and some minutes must have elapsed before the facts of the accident and the discovery of the condition of the child was made by the servant. The sufferer was taken into the nursery, and a messenger despatched in haste for the President and his lady. Drs. Poticelas, Conway and Garnett, the family physician, successively came in and applied their skill without avail, he never recovered consciousness—dying in about three-quarters of an hour after being taken up by the servant and carried into the house.

THE HAMILTON POST-OFFICE.

A curious illustration of the difference between a weak man when free from bad influences, and the same person when in the hands of bad associates, has just come to light. When Mr. Foley was Postmaster General in the Macdonald Sicotte Government, he fell in with the retrenchment policy announced by that Administration, and gave some attention to the work of reducing the expenses of his particular department. He issued a Commission to enquire into the state of certain post-offices, and that Commission reported that the services of Mr. F. E. Ritchie, ex-Deputy Postmaster at Hamilton, might properly be dispensed with. Mr. Foley very promptly acted upon that report, and issued his fiat turning Mr. Ritchie adrift. In season and out of season, the Postmaster General has never failed to take just credit to himself for the retrenchments which he effected in the Post-office Department, of course, including the Ritchie saving among the rest. This was Mr. Foley when a member of a Reform Government, and under the influence of the Reform party. A few weeks since he transferred his allegiance to a party which he had always denounced, for the sake of the Postmaster Generalship. At once he began to see matters in a totally different light. Within a few days he has actually re-appointed this Mr. Ritchie to his old place, at his old salary of $1400 a year! Having turned Conservative, Mr. Foley has lost no time in adopting the Coalition creed in its fullest sense. Last year he was a retrenchment minister; now he is adding to the expenditure of the country to serve party purposes. It has been his habit to boast of his retrenchments when in office. If by any accident he could be left in his present position for a few months, he would have to quit that sort of boasting, and turn his ingenuity to the task of framing excuses for his extravagance. This incident seems to show the utter folly of supposing that the character of the Coalition can be improved by the absorption of two or three weak men like Mr. Foley.—Globe.

They are all old hands at counterfeiting, and have carried on the business for several years in this city and elsewhere. They will be sent to Washington for trial.

....HARD ON GREENBACKS.—An amusing circumstance happened the other day in Port Dover, which illustrates the marketableness of "greenbacks" in Canada. A beggar entered the office of a business man in the village, and solicited contributions from the people who were there. Some gave him a five cent piece, others three cents, and an American having no silver small enough handed him a one dollar U. S. Treasury note. The beggar looked at it and handed it back to him with the scornful remark, "I don't take such money as that." The American said we had little appreciation of United States currency in Canada, when even the beggars wouldn't take greenbacks for nothing.

And now, sad we are to say it, he is almost hopelessly a vagrant, and the other day was sentenced to six months in the City Prison as the best place for one unable to control his passion for strong drink.

Returning, she made a [illegible] in the patient, and, entering, gently raised the bed-clothes from a sleeping form and placed the poultice on its stomach. TONE of the RICHMOND JOURNALS

THE CAPITAL THREATENED.

(From the Richmond Whig, 7th.)

In some respects Richmond is in more danger than when McClellan, at the head of one hundred thousand men, was encamped within five miles of the corporation limits. Our readers are well aware of the weak point in our defence. They know the city is in peril, and they have repaired promptly to the field. The quiet determination of the citizens yesterday morning was worthy of all praise. Knowing that the hour of suffering and trial had come, they armed themselves and went palsily forth to defend their wives and children from a barbarous foe.—Every man felt that the occupation of the city, even for a single hour, involved consequences most terrible, apart from the destruction of property. Manifestoes calamities to the poor and unprotected, who would be crouching in garrets and cellars, were to be dreaded. To avert these calamities fathers and brothers and sons were willing to lay down their lives. The cause was holy; how could they be otherwise than confident. With regard to the weak side of our defences, we may state on good authority that its weakness is less than the more nervous of our population suppose, and every hour makes it stronger. Some apprehension is felt in regard to the number of troops in and around the city. On that point it would be obviously improper to state particulars. We may be very sure, however, that heavy reinforcements are at hand. They may not arrive in time to prevent the enemy from achieving a temporary success, such as the burning of a bridge, and the capture of an outpost, but they can come soon enough to punish the enemy for his temerity. We expect for several days to come an unwonted degree of excitement and many startling and alarming rumours. The enemy will bring us not a little, and the busy-bodies will do their best to excite a panic. Such vexations are inevitable in time of peril, and can be counteracted only by anticipating them, and possessing a firm mind in spite, not only of rumours, but of unpleasant facts. Let us possess our souls in patience, no matter what happens. Panics only make matters worse, and the best way to meet a danger is to face it. In an hour like this hardiness of nerve should be cultivated, for the air will be thick with ugly and evil reports. Our duty is plain—first to defend the city to the last gasp, as well from the lawless within as from the invaders without; and next, to encourage and sustain our defenders. The many wounded who will be sent here, must not be left to the hospital attendants alone.

COURT GOSSIP.—A capital story, in reference to the gossip of the Court, is "going the round," which is too good to be withheld from your readers. It is said that the Princess of Wales, previously to leaving town for Sandringham, had an interview with Dr. Locock, with reference to His Royal Highness, Master Albert Victor, and that she inquired with true maternal solicitude, whether the circumstances of the Royal infant being a seven months' child was likely to affect his physical or mental condition hereafter. Dr. Locock assured Her Royal Highness that there was not the slightest ground for any supposition of the kind, seeing that some of the most distinguished men of their time were reared from infants of seven months, as an illustration of what a seven months' child might become, Dr. Locock referred Her Royal Highness to Lord Brougham, Her Majesty's Chief Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, whose sagacious policy with respect to the Danish-German difficulty was, no doubt, fresh in the recollection of Her Royal Highness at the time. The unfortunate reputation of Lord Russell as a type of physical and intellectual [illegible] must rank [illegible] Brougham and fall of great." Dr. Locock is certainly not a courtier.—Belfast News-Letter.

THE RECENT HEAVY RAINS.

GREAT FRESHET IN THE EARLY MORNING.

A DESTRUCTIVE FRESHET IN THE HUMBER.

The spring of 1864 will be remembered as one of the most extraordinary seasons ever experienced in Canada. In the memories of that special class designated "the oldest inhabitants" such another one never known. The winter was unusually mild and open one, and while the first day of spring is announced rushing, and almost without intermission but continued even since. Why in this part of the country, have not been favoured with one week of really fine, clear, bright weather since the first of April, and from the appearance of the sky last night it seems very probable we shall have to go. Yesterday was comparatively fine, and even during her fine inward nature; dark, heavy clouds appeared in the east, the lightning flashed, the thunder rolled, and down came the rain in torrents for about half an hour. Before we turned up, though the night throughout was showery and cheerless.

From all parts of the country we have the same report. It has been nothing but rain, rain, unceasingly, until many have almost given up in despair of ever seeing a cessation of the deluge. The effect of this rain, as we may readily be supposed, has been most disastrous. On Saturday morning last (Saturday) telegrams from Cobourg, Belleville, and other places came to hand, bearing in with great damage had been done in that district through the extraordinary freshet. The numerous small lakes in the township back of Cobourg and Belleville rose to an unusual height, and as a natural consequence, their outlets also increased in size and strength. Most of these outlets are comparatively small streams, emptying into Lake Ontario, and in their ordinary state are an account of danger. But from the above cause their waters swelled to such an extent, and rolled onward with such fatal force that nothing was to escape everything before them. Mill-dams gave way, saw and grist mills, barns, stables and bridges were swept from their positions, carried down the streams and dashed to pieces. Several substantial bridges on the Grand Trunk Railway and large portions of the track were washed away, rendering traffic along that portion of the road impossible for some time. The extent of the damage done, or the probable cost of making the necessary repairs, cannot at present be estimated, though it will take several thousand dollars to make good the loss. The trains, of course, will all be late hereafter, for some days at least, though the company have made temporary arrangements whereby passengers and their baggage are conveyed round the breaches and placed upon other trains. Gangs of men have been put to work, and as soon as possible the road will be complete again.

In addition to this we learn that great damage has been done in other parts of the country. In some places the fall wheat has been completely washed out of the ground, while in other parts again, whole fields lie buried under water. Of course agricultural operations here, in consequence of these rains, been almost entirely suspended, and scarcely anything has as yet been done in the planting of spring crops, as even if the ground were in the proper order, which, of course, it cannot be, it would be useless to put them in under present circumstances. In many places the fields will require replowing and an unusual amount of labour before they can be made fit for seed.

An Indignant Wife.

On Thursday evening last a well-dressed respectable looking woman, who observed peculiarly plainly, King street, apparently in a nervous and excited state of mind, and attracted some attention from one or two persons in consequence of the anxiety she manifested while peering into the windows of several well known restaurants.—She finally entered a saloon, but after rapidly glancing at the features of the gentlemen present, and not recognizing the individual she was evidently in search of, she turned on her heel and left without speaking to any one. Upon again appearing on the sidewalk, she again directed her steps to another restaurant, and upon entering the bar-room, was fortunate to confronting her liege lord, who was in the act of filling "up the flowing bowl" and singing "we want go home till morning." The disciple of Bacchus instantly changed his tune upon beholding the form of his injured and indignant wife, and without attempting to ask for an explanation, dropped his cigar, turned on his toe as on a pivot, and instantly darted through the back door, and disappeared. Having some other to wreak her vengeance upon, the lady turned upon the bar-keeper and scolded him most effectually for allowing her husband to remain night after night in the saloon spending his money and neglecting his family. She said it was monstrous and more than any woman of spirit could stand; indeed it was too much for human nature to bear up against, and for herself she could'nt and would'nt permit her husband to conduct himself so improperly in future. She then took her departure, and upon again coming on the street met the man who had but a moment or two before regretted their having been prohibited in the most unceremonious manner to unbosom him for his unfaithful conduct. The guilty fellow was dumbfounded, and after groaning deeply in spirit, exclaimed—"Well, what a d——d mess for this is! Madam, I beg to inform you that yours is one way and mine is another." This speech, however, appeared to have little effect upon the feelings of the injured, and indignant woman, who, when last seen, was driving her husband home before her along Young street. Take warning, ye unfaithful husbands, who leave your wives to mourn in solitude whilst you are enjoying yourselves over your cups.—Globe.

Two MEN DROWNED.—Frank Deane and Hugh Donahoe, two residents of Lindsay, left Lindsay on a canoe, on Thursday last, with the intention of proceeding to Fenelon Falls. Having transacted their business at that place, they started to return to Lindsay. When about the mouth of the stream which connects Canoe on with Sturgeon Lake, through some cause or other the canoe was upset and the unfortunate men thrown into the water. A man who was fishing in the vicinity heard their cries, and at once proceeded for a boat, but before he had returned both had disappeared. Early on Sunday morning friends of the deceased, accompanied by a number of townspeople with grappling irons, &c., took boats for the scene of the sad accident. They found the body of Donahoe in an upright position in the water, and that of Deane's at the bottom of the river about a boat's length off. Deane, when found, had one of his boots off; and it is supposed, as he was a good swimmer, had taken this to the endeavor to ease his companion. Deane, who was a brother of Messrs. W. H. & H. Deane, Provincial Land Surveyor, Lindsay, was in his 33rd year. Both were much respected by all who knew them.—Lindsay Post.

"THERE'S MANY A SLIP BETWEEN THE CUP AND THE LIP."—The truth of this old saying has again been verified, and the accident we are about to relate will cause sorrow in the hearts of many a fair reader. A young lad residing in the city fell in love, and after courting awhile with a maiden ten years his senior, the pair ardent, she was plighting, and the usual arrangements happened. She urged an immediate marriage, but the lad was in no condition to undertake the responsibility of supporting a family. His therefore proposed to go to Dundas to wait for more remunerative employment, and when he had here, promising to send for her as soon as it would provide a comfortable home. He went, obtained work, and kept up a correspondence with his intended; but the letters became less frequent, spoke of love in a cottage, and finally ceased upon an early performance of his oft-repeated promise. This seems to have brought matters to a crisis, for in reply to a letter he had told her to come to Dundas, where, they could be married on her arrival. She lost no time in arranging her affairs, and started a week since, but to the astonishment of her friends she returned alone yesterday. It appears from her statement that on reaching the boarding house of her lover, she found that he had vanished, and was then en route for the army of the Potomac. He left a message that her importunities had driven him to despair, that he never could think of marrying her, and that rather than do so he preferred to seek "glory at the cannon's mouth," and run the chances of being laid low by steel Southern bullet. We cannot attempt to describe her disappointment, but she took the wise course of returning home, and leaving an little friend it as possible. Where she next begins for a husband, she will doubtless look out for older game than she took.—Hamilton Spectator.

Justice to a Patent Medicine.

It is not often we lend a word in favor of Patent Medicines, as we very seldom are satisfied of their good results. But there is one preparation so long established, and of such acknowledged merit, that we feel we do the public a service in recommending it. We have reference to Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry the most remarkable remedy of the age for all throat an lung diseases. Many of our citizens can attest to the truth of this from personal observation.—Quebec Chronicle.

In returning thanks to my numerous friends who have favored me liberally patronized me for the last twenty years, and having increased facilities, and the experience of that length of time, I feel that I may with confidence, recommend the above to their notice.
I would also call their attention to the STEEL MOULD Implements, which are the first ever introduced into this County, and to the above I have added my own inventions, viz., the Gang, and am prepared to fill orders for the same. Having a large supply of well seasoned OAK TIMBER, I am prepared to make Waggons. Repairing in that line, and Jobbing done promptly and on reasonable terms.

CANADA TO GARIBALDI.

Hark! that voice from afar the ocean,
Hear its tones so loud and clear,
Tones of gladness and devotion,
Welcoming a hero dear.

Dear to Britain, dear to Freemen,
Dear to Liberty and Peace,
Princes, Kings, Peasants, Statesmen,
Honor Garibaldi's name.

'Tis Britannia's 'tis her greeting
With Italia's dearest son,
'Tis her heart-warm-loving greeting,
With earth's bravest, noblest one.

Beget him well, ye sons of England,
Tenfold honor to him bring,
Comfort him with kindly words, and
Heed not what the world may say,

Hark! that voice from o'er the ocean,
Hear its tones so loud and clear,
Tones of gladness and devotion,
Welcoming a hero dear.

Echo! catch our million voices,
Waft them back to Britain's shore;
Canada's young heart rejoices,
Louder far than ocean's roar.

LOCKED IN.

It was on a leaden-looking evening in October 1853, that the fast-sailing packet Conciliation steamed out of the harbor at Holyhead. Dark clouds were gathering overhead, the short clapping waves dipped the sides of the vessel consantly, and the black smoke shot straight from the funnel to the receding shore, as if anxious to escape from the restless turbulence of the water and from a sooty canopy over dry land.

There were but few passengers on board, and a drizzling rain crept them below. One gentleman alone stood his ground upon the quarterdeck, and, comfortably encased in a coat of oilskin, puffed his cigar in defiance of the weather. He was a tall, fair-haired man, with a bright eye, thin, high-bridged nose, and light wavy moustaches, through which was seen a good-humored but sarcastic mouth. He accommodated himself to the motion of the vessel like an experienced traveller, and, with well-gloved hands deep in his capacious pockets, looked on the stormstain, the seaduk, the lights upon the distant pier, and the vibration beneath him and about him, with an easy and comfortable nonchalance of manner that seemed part of him.

Upon an obsequious and curley-headed steward—who kept coming on deck, and then diving down into the cabin upon those purposeless errands which would appear to be the continual employment of those functionaries when on duty—passing near the traveller, he said: 'Have you come to tell me that I mustn't smoke?'

'No, sir,' said the steward, with the usual deprecating smile; 'you can smoke if you choose, sir; there's nobody on deck but you.'

'Very few passengers to-night remarked the gentleman.

'Yes, sir, very few, sir,' replied the steward; 'you're the only cabin-passenger aboard.'

'Am I?' said the gentleman. 'Then I suppose I shall have my choice of berths?'

'Whichever you please, sir, when you come below. We're only one other passenger, and she's a lady.'

'Ah!' said the gentleman, looking down the skylight, as if to see if his fellow-traveller were in the cabin. 'I'm afraid you shall have a rough passage.'

'Yes, sir,' answered the acquiescent steward; 'it does look very dirty to windward, sir;' and he dived down again.

The traveller lighted a fresh cigar, tossed away his old one, looked at the white foam in the vessel's wake and resumed his march. He was naturally a gregarious, companionable sort of a fellow, fond of society, argument, the shock of opinion and collision of ideas. He had hoped to meet some other well-travelled man with whom he could have smoked and chatted. He felt that he should have himself alone, and began to think about the lady who was to be sole companion in the boat.

'I wish I knew her,' thought he; 'we could converse some hours away. Twenty years ago, I should have considered this quite an adventure. What fools men are in their salad-days! I should have thought that it was fate that had thrown us together, because we were destined for each other. Perhaps she is married, or old or disagreeable. I shall be horribly bored till we reach Kingstown.'

After half an hour's more walking he looked down the sky-light once again and saw the lady seated in the cabin taking tea.

'She doesn't suffer, at all events,' he thought to himself; 'I may as well have a look at her;' and he descended his cigar and disappeared the brass-bound steps leading to the cuddy.

The lady about whom he felt so interested was over thirty years of age, but despite a pallid complexion, haggard, mournful eyes, possessed great beauty. Her manners were elegant and refined; and a tinge of exhaustion in her face and coiny heightened the sense of sadness and sentiment that hung around her. Overwrought sensibility and sensitive nervous organization were written in the constant play of her short thin upper lip, and the perfect taste of her dress completed the charm of a very fascinating invalid.

When the gentleman entered the cabin, she was seated at the table, waited on by a bustling and active stewardess. He took off his cap—as it rung—at her, and disembarrassed himself of his oil-skin covering. He coughed in token of his presence, but she took no notice, but continued playing with her teaspoon, all unconscious of his entrance.

With a glance at the mirror, that betrayed a knowledge of the possession of a good appearance, and a twinkling of a well-

When the gentleman entered the cabin, she was seated at the table, waited on by a bustling and active stewardess. He took off his cap—as it rung—at her, and disembarrassed himself of his oil-skin covering. He coughed in token of his presence, but she took no notice, but continued playing with her teaspoon, all unconscious of his entrance.

With a glance at the mirror, that betrayed a knowledge of the possession of a good appearance, and a twinkling of a well-find event, the gentleman advanced towards the table and coughed again. The lady looked up, saw the new comer and bowed slightly.

'I fear we are going to have a rough passage,' began the male traveller, when the lady shrunked, and would have fallen, had not the stewardess run forward to support her. The gentleman turned pale and red, and pale again, and trembled in every limb.

'Bring some water,' he said, after a moment's pause. 'Don't be alarmed; it's the—the surprise—the sight—Let me—' He waved his hands excitedly and dashed in an incoherent, while the stewardess ran for the smelling-bottle. By the aid of their united exertions, in about five minutes the lady recovered and took a deep breath as if relieved from an unpleasant dream.

'Butler, leave us,' said the gentleman.

'Do you know the lady, sir?' asked the stewardess, hardly knowing what to do.

'Know her? Yes.'

'You're only got to call, mam; I shall be close to,' said the stewardess. 'Can I do anything more, mam?'

'No—no, thank you,' said the lady; 'I am quite well now. You—you need not trouble yourself further.'

The stewardess quitted the cabin, leaving the two passengers staring at each other in mute wonder.

'Good God, Maria, is it you?' said the gentleman.

'It seems almost impossible it can be you,' answered the lady in low faltering tones.

'Are you—better now?' inquired the gentleman. 'Can I get anything for you.'

'Nothing, thank you—if it be really you?'

'It seems like a dream,' continued the gentleman—'to think that, after ten years, we should meet upon the boat! It is the most unexpected accident.'

'Accident!' repeated the lady with an inquiring look.

'Accident? Yes; really accident.'

'Are you sure you did not know that I was coming on board this—'

'How could I?' interrupted the gentleman. 'I only landed at Southampton last week. Not a soul I knew was in London; so I took a run over to Dublin to visit Vincey Maguire. It's the most inexplicable adventure, to think of man and wife, ten years apart, meeting in the cabin of— Are you going, Maria?'

The lady had risen from her seat. 'I see no reason for my remaining,' she said quietly.

'If you cannot bear to breathe the same atmosphere with me, I will retire,' said the husband. 'I will not turn you out of the cabin; I'll go on deck!'

The lady looked up to the skylight above her, on which the rain was pattering fearfully.

'Impossible to stay on deck in a night like this,' said she, with a faint return of the interest of a wife.

'Thank you for that,' Maria.

'I did not mean that,' she explained hastily; 'I—'

'You are unkind not to let me think you did,' said the husband. At all events, since we have met in this strange way, do not let us meet as enemies.'

'Enemies? No!' smiled the lady.

'Yield to a suggestion of mine for once,' continued the husband. 'You were taking tea—don't let me deprive you of that; I will refresh you; or—' his face lighted up with a bright idea—'suppose we take tea together?'

'Together!' echoed the lady.

'Oh! don't be alarmed,' said the gentleman; 'you shall pay for your own and I for mine, and we'll have it on different trays in the most platonic manner possible.'

Despite the rapid beating of her heart, the lady could not repress a smile, of which her husband took immediate advantage by ordering tea for him—if. The tea was brought, and he placed himself at the table opposite his wife.

Mr. and Mrs. Thirlby had been married in the year 1846. Miss Harborowe was a noted beauty, and Francis Thirlby a somewhat erratic bachelor. After a honeymoon and three or four months more of unmixed sweetness, spent abroad amidst grand old ruins, crumbling columns and colossal statues, like shosts of greatness passed away, under dreamy skies and over pent volcanoes, they returned to cool and cloudy England—its temperatures summers, mild though murky winters, and carefully concerted domestic hurricanes.

A year passed, and among old friends, old haunts and old associations, easy-going Mr. Thirlby became the most perfect husband, engaged more with his Greenwich dinners and his white-tie teas, than he gave a party, unless he would rather with his accustomed brilliance. While alone with his wife he appeared absorbed in meditation. She resented his want of assiduity, and he resented her resentment. She had been an only child; so had he. Neither would be first to yield! Each was largely endowed with the fatal gift of tongue, and used it mercilessly. They stabbed their mutual happiness with epigrams and battered down their home with the artillery of bitter words. Months passed in fierce storms and lowering threatening calms. The last prostration was given. Mrs Thirlby was jealous. She left the house, and shortly after a separation was mutually agreed on.

Mr. Thirlby, finding his fireside cold and his home merely furnished apartments, resolved on adopting a career. He had interest at the India House, and obtained an appointment in the Civil Service. Years had passed. He had returned; and on his meet, he felt that he could have begun his courtship once again; the last fourteen years were annihilated; she was before him; the old charm dazzled around her, and he felt his heart eagerly as he passed the well-remembered features and their play beneath the swinging light in the close, trembling, rocking cabin.

Mrs. Thirlby sat with her eyes fixed on the trembling saucer, intensely calm, watchful, impassive old priest. Her husband, leaning the elbow on the table and the head upon his hand, said: 'Good my God!

Maria, you are looking handsomer than ever!'

A flush of pleasure surged up to Mrs. Thirlby's face; she beat it back again bravely, but dashed into a slight confusion, for she felt, with the self-consciousness of a handsome woman, that her husband had

'This is a remarkable meeting, is it not?' continued he, hardly knowing what to say, yet disliking silence more than interesting something commonplace. 'By the way, you have a servant with you, haven't you?'

'Mr,' replied the lady.

'No! there is not!'

'Harriet had never crept the sea in her life and refused to embark. She said we were sure to be drowned; so I came away without her.'

'How odd!' said the husband; 'there's not a single passenger—I mean in the cabin—but ourselves.'

'We are single said the wife relaxing to a smile. —

'Of course my ears—at present,' said the husband.

'And mean to keep so,' continued Mrs. Thirlby, observing that her husband's eyes were fixed on hers with an expression of deep interest. Fearing that his startled gaze was noticed, that gentleman swallowed nearly a whole cup of tea at a draught.

'I haven't enjoyed my tea so much for years,' said he, putting down the empty cup—'I mean my ten years.'

It was always Mr. Francis Thirlby's practice to just when he was to unreel, until he felt his way and his antagonist's power of resistance.

'Shall I be indiscreet in asking what motive you have in visiting Ireland?' he asked, feeling that no reply, verbal or facial was made to his last observation.

Mrs. Thirlby poured herself out a second cup of tea and said: 'I am going to pass a few months with— Oh!'

She shrieked with pain. Thirlby rose with an anxious and perturbed countenance.

'What's the matter?' he asked.

'I have scalded my hand,' replied his ex-wife applying her lips to the part affected.

'Allow me,' said he, about to take hold of the injured member.

'Thank you, no,' said the lady, hastily withdrawing it. 'I permit no interference with what is entirely my own property.'

The face of the husband darkled red, and the wife felt the cruel pleasure of victory.

'Better put a little dry soap on it; most things in the world for a scald,' said he; 'I have some in my bag.'

'You are very kind,' answered the wife, touched with the attention.

'Not at all, Maria,' said Thirlby, following up the unseen with the Christian name. 'I have something of a traveller now, and am always provided with those little comforts—I should say necessaries.'

He opened a black leather bag, scraped some soap on to a clean white handkerchief, and applied it to his wife's hand tenderly and carefully. He saw the wedding-ring shine over the white skin, and gave ever so small a sigh as he tied the knot just above it.

'Poor little hand said he carelessly, as he bent his head down towards it.

'Thank you; that will do very well!' remarked his wife putting it on her the table.

'Nothing like soft soap!' said he smiling.

'No,' answered the lady with placid dignity.

'How the boat pitches! Are you are wounded, shall I do the honors?' said he.

'You are very gallant,' she replied.

'Wasn't I always?' he asked, as he resumed himself.

'Always,' replied the wife; 'but to me.'

'My dear Maria.'

'Pardon me; you are forgetting yourself!'

'Not at all,' returned the husband stoutly. 'I repeat it. Why were you and I so unhappy together?'

The vessel strained and pitched as he spoke, and orders were given upon deck and the wind howled and the rain beat down on the skylight above them.

'There's a storm coming on,' he remarked rather complacently.

'I am afraid there is,' replied the wife.

'But answer my question.'

'What question?'

'Oh, you know,' said he irritably. 'I asked you why we were always so unhappy together.'

'I might as well ask you why you always were so unkind?' said Mrs. Thirlby.

'I recognize you there,' said the husband: 'you answer one question by asking another. I remember you always did. It used to irritate me—'

'Everything I did used to irritate you,' interrupted the wife, calm and provoking.

'When it was irritating,' amended Mr. Thirlby.

'Well found it so,' said the lady with feminine coolness.

'Of course it was me,' returned the husband; 'I was the villain—husbands always are?'

'No; I was the tormagant—wives always are?' repeated the lady.

'My love, you were always good and right and pious and virtuous,' said Thirlby, his tone of sarcasm overcoming his better reason. 'You were always properly proper—all broken-hearted submission, sighless and downcast eyes, go of edifying to the world: Look here! my husband is breaking my heart; not that I complain; oh, dear no; I am too good for that. He is killing me, and I am rather glad to be, I am so angelic and resigned!'

'Mrs. Thirlby lost her brows for a moment; she hesitated between quitting the cabin and replying. Temper triumphed and she spoke.

'If so, you pursued the opposite tactics,' said she. 'You were all smiles, frankness, jollity and good humor—to the world; a sort of proclamation of: See what a fine generous, open-hearted fellow I am, and put my wife—an unintelligible wife am I—Oh, thank heaven, I am not your wife now?'

The ship pitched again; and Mrs. Thirlby nearly fell to the floor, but without

'Now couldn't you have a powder,' said her husband, 'and recover the two things? you're not on terms, many pounds?'

'I did not expect it?' said the lady coldly.

'Yes, you did!'

'No, I didn't!'

'Yes you did!'

'I did not, sir,' repeated the lady, tapping the table authoritively with her undamaged hand, and so knocking off the other cup, which broke into a dozen pieces.

'There,' said her husband, picking up the fragments carefully and dropping them before her, 'perhaps you won't break that other?'

It would be impossible to describe the contempt to which husband was. Thirlby was put on by the accident. Her face darkened, and, without losing its beauty, looked a thousand times more aged and repulsive with passion.

Thirlby tried to walk the cabin. 'Has not subdued that awful temper, then?' said he.

'No! the recollection of your ill-usage,' she replied. 'Neither can I have one hundred and ten thousand pounds.'

'Two hundred!' he commanded; 'you'll be a fine old lady by then.'

'And so will you,' returned the wife; 'you're more than forty-seven!'

'Well, if I am,' answered the husband angrily, 'you're five-and-thirty—no chicken either!'

One of the chief causes that matrimonial differences are so bitter is, that each party is so well informed of the enemy's weak side.

'Why positively you're tipsy!' said Mrs. Thirlby, who had not before perceived the shining scalp in the centre of her husband's cranium: 'you, quite bald at the top!'

Mrs. Thirlby rested white with passion—she was a very vain one—and worked up to her as if about to make some overwhelming reply. Unfortunately, he saw that here was no black, as lustrous and as rich as ever.

His wife grasped his intention, and said aggravatingly: 'Poor old man, was he bald, then?'

'You know you were always a beauty,' muttered the husband.

Mrs. Thirlby rose from her seat and bowed, as if she said: 'I know it;' which irritated her husband more than ever.

'As lovely as ever,' continued he.

'At all events,' replied the lady, 'that Miss—'

'Silence, madam!' thundered the husband. 'You have too often repeated that lady's name and I forbid—'

'You forbid, indeed!' cried his wife.

'And why, sir, are you that you command me?' Why should I not mention that woman's—I beg pardon—lady's name? Who is to prevent me? 'Not her lover, sir,' she continued, lashing herself into a rage, 'when he has ceased to be my husband.'

'By Jove!' said Thirlby, 'this is as it used to be; but as you say we are no separated;' and he beat his head over the table and drowned: 'For the next other minutes, however make us truly separated!'

Mrs. Thirlby tore the handkerchief from the scalded hand and threw it across the table—the fragments of scent fell into the sugar-basin.

'What a noble vengeance!' exclaimed he in a pompous tone. 'What greatness! what magnanimity of soul! and what a brilliant repartee! 'Pon my word, this is refreshing! What a meeting after ten years' absence! The breeze without, the row within. Any one could swear to us for man and wife!'

'Not your wife now, sir!'

'No, not my wife now. As I said a minute ago: for then and other moments—'

The lady rose to her feet. 'Do not insult me, sir!' she said. 'I have been at peace for ten years. Do not raise feelings that—that—that—that'

'That what?' asked the husband.

Here Mrs. Thirlby began to feel the effect of the motion of the vessel. 'I—I—I don't feel well she said.

'Ah! excitement,' said the husband unconcernedly.

'No, sir, the sea—I mean the tea. I shall go to my berth. When we get to Kingston you can see Franky and—'

'Franky! Who's Franky?' asked the husband.

Mrs. Thirlby looked him full in the face as she answered, 'Your son, sir!'

Another lurch of the vessel threw Mr. Thirlby into a seat as he repeated, 'My son!' He hardly understood the meaning of the words.

Something rose to the husband's throat and eyes so locked first up and then down at his long-lost wife, in the position of the cabin floor heaved or lowered her.

'He was born three months after your departure,' continued Mrs. Thirlby.

'Why did I not know of it?'

'I kept it out of the papers purposely,' said the wife.

'And you called him Francis,' said the now thoroughly husband.

'Yes—Master Francis Thirlby,' he—

'Thank you, Maria; that was kind.'

'My duty—nothing more,' said the lady.

'How old is he?'

'Ten in August—on the fifth.'

'God bless him!' said the father. 'Is he handsome?'

'Oh! very—very handsome,' said the mother.

'A—at all like me?' inquired the father.

'Like what you were—very.'

'And in his manner?'

'He is passionate in the extreme; like what you were—very. Here is a letter I had from him last Thursday. He is gone visit to my cousin, who was married to Colonel O'Grady three years ago.

The father took the letter, and held it under the shading lamp. The gale had blown itself into a perfect storm, and he could hardly keep upon his feet as he read the large schoolboy hand:

'My dear, dear Mamma—I am so glad that you are so soon coming. I have no news. I am quite well. Franky's papa beat one of the horses yesterday. We go to Sandy Mount every day. Aunt sends her love—so does Franky. Good-bye you. Your affectionate Darby.

'Merrion Square, Dublin Ireland.'

The letter crumpled and opened, till the lines became blurred, and indistinct, and a drop splashed on to the paper—then another, and another. Mrs. Thirlby jumped up, and, with a cry of joy, threw her arms round her husband's neck, and sobbed on his breast.

'Maria!—she tried to take her hand, but the husband drew it—and you forgive me?'

'The past—yes; the future, I will not trust in your hands. As I said, when we leave the boat—'

The steward entered the cabin suddenly by the violent heeling of the deck. The door was heard to lock behind her; and there was a noise overhead as of children and throwing. Her disguised steward, and a child or two more, recognized, but trembling voice:

'Do you mind with me, my dear, as we are soon; we are expected to go down every minute!'

Thirlby looked at her for an instant, then taking his wife up in his arms, rushed to the cabin door.

'We are fastened down!' said the steward with terrible calmness. 'The craft is in the raging. I shall go to my cabin, and put it there.' 'Oh, for the love of God, take me to the boat!' 'Be not afraid!' he gasped; 'we're saved! saved! Where's my master?' 'Come, dear, open the door—we're saved, I tell you!'

The steward opened the door, said both couples rushed to the deck.

'We shall overtake it, groaned he God!' said the white-haired captain. 'It has passed us two hours ago!'

'Maria!'

'Hush! We have received a severe punishment for our presumption and our crime.'

A steaming came out to their rescue, and carried them safely into Kingstown harbor. There was a smiling lady, a moustached gentleman, and a handsome yellow-haired boy awaiting them.

'Mamma!—my dear, dear mamma!' cried the young gentleman with contagious ecstacy.

'Franky, my own. Here's papa!'

'Papa!' said the boy, rounding his eyes.

'Papa from India!'

'Yes, dear.'

'Mr. Thirlby?' said Mrs. O'Grady.

'Had you forgotten me, Elinor?' said that gentleman.

'Mamma, why hasn't papa been with us before, when—'

'Hush, dear!' said the mother.

Mr. Thirlby the ex-future to India and both the and the wife's name and always sat down for a handsome sum in all subscriptions for fifteen, or generations from whatever.

A prisoner being brought before that he some time ago, to escape to a gentleman, told the prosecutor that he could convict him of having stolen a thief and a murderer. Upon being required to prove his assertion, said he: 'Why, you ugly villian, you killed a monkey and stole his beautiful cage.'

PREPARATION.

"It is always well to be prepared," is an old true saw, and we are glad the Reformers of the County of Peterborough have at last awakened to the necessity for preparation. Satisfied as we are that Peterborough is thoroughly a Sifton County, and has only been misrepresented by a [illegible] in the interest of the Government, we are willing to still doubt that if the present movement is well conducted, and faithfully carried out, our County will never be misrepresented again. If Reformers will act unitedly, discreetly in the matter to be, they cannot but see the necessity of thorough organization. The present time is a most exciting one in the history of Canada. Few doubt that in a very few years, at the furthest, these great constitutional questions that have so long agitated the country, will have their solution. The election may be either then we imagine, and on the strength and honesty of the Reform party in the House depends, in a great measure, the future of our common country. If these great questions were to be taken up at the present moment, we have no hesitation in saying that such is the equality of the two parties in the House, that we would have to be satisfied with something very far below what we would wish to have.

Half measures are the worst kind of measures. Nothing could be so detrimental to the Reform cause as the acceptance by Reformers of Upper Canada of some concessions at the hands of Lower Canadians, which would virtually bind us to wait for many years before we dared to ask the more. It will not do to be always agitating. This may seem strange, but it is true. If in our present weakness we accept some small concession, Lower Canadians will say: we have got what we wanted and ought to be satisfied; and people at a distance in the mother country, for instance,—from the fact of their not knowing much of our grievances—would be apt to say we had got what we wanted and ought to be satisfied, too; and nothing would so much injure the prosperity of Upper Canada as to allow the impression to go abroad that we were, as a people, discontented. Whilst we have right on our side, and—as far as can be judged from the tone of the English papers—the sympathy of the mother country in our struggle for just rights, let us keep it. And we know of no better way than by accepting nothing—neither now nor in the future—but our full rights: full justice to the Upper Province. If we do not get this, Reformers have themselves to blame. There is not a constituency in Upper Canada that would return a member pledged against Representation by Population if Reformers themselves were earnest and persevering in their labours. Day by day the Reform element in the House and in the country is becoming stronger, and the time is not very far distant when a man will be ashamed to belong to any other party. Time was when indulgence in strong drinks was the rule—temperance the exception. Now, were any respectable man in Peterborough to be seen under the influence of liquor, his character would be ruined. The advocates of temperance were often laughed at for predicting just such a state of things as we now enjoy; and even now most people doubt that it will ever be possible to make us a sober, teetotal people But it moves, and we have no hesitation in stating that we believe that ere many years elapse the temperance principle will have made gigantic strides. So is it with the Reform cause. It moves. It is not many years since the Conservatives used always to command a majority of thirty and forty in the House; since to belong to that party was the rule, and not the exception. Look at it now—they have a bare majority of two, and an appeal to the country will certainly place them in a minority. Reformers of Peterborough! it lies in your own hands whether you will allow this state of things to continue, or by faithfully performing your part in the great struggle for the advancement of your country's good, aid by every means in your power to strengthen the hands of those men who have so nobly fought for your benefit. It is discouraging for Reformers in other counties to think that whilst they have been doing everything for the cause, we, by our carelessness, have been allowing that cause to be not only weakened but positively injured. Why is it that we are represented by a Conservative? Not because we were unable to return a Reformer; we know better than that. Not because we believed in Mr. Cornet's Reform protestations; we doubt if a dozen of electors in the County of Peterborough have been deceived in the course Mr. Cornet has pursued. How is it, then, that we allowed ourselves to be misrepresented? Simply, we believe, because we were not sufficiently in earnest—because we neglected to do our duty.

A movement in the right direction has been begun; of Peterborough it can be said it moves. An association is about to be formed for the purpose of returning, at the first and every future election, a thorough Reformer—some one who will endeavour to the utmost of his power to aid in effecting those great reforms we so much need. And we urge upon every man in the County of Peterborough, by whatever name he may have been called in the past, to join in the movement. Personally, we believe, that justice to Upper Canada will be the only panacea for the chronic difficulties by which we have been so long swamped. And we do not believe that there are ten electors in the County who do not desire that along with ourselves. All those gentlemen, then, in so organising that it may be impossible in future for anyone to represent you in the House who is opposed to that principle, or who, by his votes supports a party in power who is opposed to it.

During all the time our present representative has been in the House, he has voted with the Lower Canadian party out of opposition to the Upper Canada majority. If Reformers at the last election had done their duty, he had not been in the House to do so. We do not blame Mr. Cornet for the manner in which he votes—he votes as we expected he would. We must blame ourselves for returning him to the House at all.

Reformers of Peterborough! be prepared at the meeting—there are many good reasons for attending—it is your duty; take steps to be your interests represented. Let the cause be [illegible]—whatever misfortune you may not expect to succeed—by proper combination and organization you are certain to gain the day.

QUEEN'S BIRTH-DAY.

This holiday was celebrated on Tuesday last with much fitting ceremony. The efforts the various Rifle Company's and the Fire Brigade made for the management of the Leigne were very successful. Indeed, had it not been for their endeavors the holiday would have hung very heavy on the hands of the good folks of Peterborough.

In the forenoon, the various volunteer companies turned out and marched to the Court House park, where, after going through various handsome movements very nicely and correctly, they fired the feu de joie. We congratulate the volunteers on their doing—it was exceedingly close and well executed, when like one volunteer said: We found some gentlemen members of the Cobourg Volunteer Co., may visit the firing on Tuesday was the closest they had heard.

But the Fire Company's celebration was decidedly the attraction of the day. In the early part they went over [illegible] and which they went were followed by admiring crowds. They did certainly a credit of stalwart fellows, in their unceasing efforts—throwing a heavy stream of water over the new tower on the Town Hall—power. In the evening they turned out once more, and fairly astonished the admiring crowd. We have seen a larger Torch-light Procession, but seldom a more effective one. The Fireworks, too, were very fine—the display was grand, and was heartily applauded. We congratulate the Fire Company on the success attending their efforts—they were, certainly, very successful. About ten, the Fire Company and their guests sat down to an excellent supper prepared by the host of the Huffman House. We had the good fortune to be present, and, certainly a more good humoured and jolly company seldom sat down together. Every one seemed to vie with his neighbor in doing honor to the occasion. The utmost cordiality prevailed, and the guests of the Fire Brigade must surely feel grateful to their entertainers for the hospitality with which they were treated. Nearly seventy gentlemen were present; Captain McMasterman presided, supported on the right by the Mayor, Mr. Bewsher and W. H. Scott, Esq., on the left by Chief Engineer Hall, Mr. Lawson and other members of the corporation. The Vice Chair was ably filled by Messrs. O'Donnell and Gildray. The usual loyal and patriotic toasts were given and heartily responded to, followed by "The Day and all who honor it." We would like to have given a detailed account of the proceedings at the supper, but our limited space forbids. Suffice it to say that the entertainment was one of the best we have witnessed in a long time and after being well enlivened by toast and song the meeting broke up at 1 A. M.—the assembled company singing "God save the Queen."

LITTLE LAKE CEMETERY.

As the fine weather has fairly set in, the Cemetery has become a very popular place for Sunday afternoon strolls. The Directors have made arrangements to have all the fences put into a state of repair. We hope that they will be able to spend a few dollars in dressing the walks, and have that heap of brush removed from the circle, which ought to be laid out as a neat garden plot, and some grass and flowers arranged in it, as it will probably be some little time before a chapel is erected. If a few plain seats were put up in the Cemetery, it would be a decided advantage. In this connection we publish below section 9 of the Act referring to Cemeteries. Any person owning a lot will surely feel sufficient interest in keeping the place neat and making it beautiful to induce them to have any violation of this section promptly reported to Mr. Forsyth, the man in charge of the place, who will at once have the guilty parties brought up and punished:

And be it enacted, That any person who shall wilfully destroy, mutilate, deface, injure, or remove any tomb, monument, gravestone or other structure placed in any Cemetery, or any fence, railing, or other work for the protection or ornament of any Cemetery, or of any tomb, monument gravestone, or other structure aforesaid, or of any Cemetery lot within any Cemetery, or shall wilfully destroy, cut, break, or injure any tree, shrub, or plant within the limits of any Cemetery, or play at any game or sport, or discharge fire-arms (save at a military funeral) in any such Cemetery, or who shall wilfully and unlawfully disturb any persons assembled for the purpose of burying any body therein, or who shall commit any nuisance in any such Cemetery, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof before any Justice of the Peace, or other Court of competent jurisdiction, be punished by a fine of not less than one pound nor more than ten pounds, according to the nature of the offence; and such offender shall also be liable to an action of trespass, to be brought against him in any Court of competent jurisdiction, in the name of any such Corporation aforesaid, to pay all damages which shall have been occasioned by his unlawful acts; which money, when recovered, shall be applied under the direction of the Directors for the reparation and reconstruction of the property destroyed, and members of any such Company may be competent witnesses in such suits.—Review.

REFORM CONVENTION.

At an influential meeting of the Reformers of Peterborough, a Committee was appointed to draft a Circular to be sent to the Reformers of the County, calling them to a Convention on the Fair Day. We have been requested by a publish it here: lest any one may have been overlooked. We earnestly call the attention of Reformers to this meeting, it is of the utmost importance that it be largely attended. The following is a copy of the circular:—

"Peterborough May 23rd, 1864.

"Dear Sir,

"A Convention of the Reformers of the County of Peterborough will be held in the Committee Rooms, over the Bank of Montreal, Peterborough, on the next Fair Day, [illegible] Tuesday, the 7th of June, 1864, at [illegible] o'clock p.m. precisely.

"The Convention is held for the purpose of nominating a proper person as the Candidate of the Reform party at the next election for the County, and organizing a County Reform Association upon a permanent basis.

"You are cordially invited to be present.

"We are, dear sir, yours, &c.

HAS DROWNED.

On Saturday the 21st inst., a young man called WILLIAM BROOKER was passing the Mill Pond of Mr. Tyne, Dover, Mount Pleasant. There was a child falling into the pond, into which he went in the purpose of saving it. He was apparently successful in his purpose, but the child [illegible] managed to get hold of the half sunk child, but very soon sank again. Mr. T. H. Bone was soon on the spot, but before he reached him he had sunk to rise no more. The body was recovered the same evening and interred in the Methodist burying ground, near Mount Pleasant, on the 22nd. He was only 23 years of age.—Com.

OBITUARY.

We regret to learn the death, at Weedon, on Saturday the 14th inst., of James Rennie, Esq., locally proprietor of this paper. He had been ill lingering illness of over two years, aged 23 years and four months. Mr. Rennie was well and favorably known in Peterborough, and had health been spared to him would have made an energetic and useful man.

GRAND CONCERT.

We beg to call attention to a Concert to be given in the Victoria Hall, on this evening of Wednesday next. The advertisement promises a treat, and from the fact that it is under the auspices of the Leader we believe that these the promises will be carried out.

COURT OF REVISION.—The Court of Revision for the Town of Peterborough will be held in the Town Hall to-morrow, Friday, at 10 o'clock, A. M. See advertisement in another column.

CLOTHES WRINGER.—We beg to thank Mr. BLETCHER very kindly for the Clothes Wringer left with our good lady. Yesterday was "washing day," and we asked how it had been liked. We found that too much could not be said in praise of it. Our help declared she "could wash four times, as much as usual, and not be the very least tired." It wrung the clothes very nearly dry enough for ironing. It was so easy managed—old rotten garments could be wrung with it without danger of a rent—a great matter now, cotton is so dear. "It was too bad," they said, "they had wanted one so long." We cordially advise parties wanting Wringer's to call on Mr. BLETCHER.

On Wednesday evening the 18th inst., Mr. WALTER ROGER lectured in the Town Hall to a select and numerous audience upon "Muscular Christianity." The talented young gentleman handled his subject in a masterly manner, describing that Christianity can hold its place in the heart while surrounded by cheerfulness in the disposition, that a sad countenance is not essential to a believer in the Gospel of Christ. He strenuously advocated soundness of body as conducive to health of mind, and pleaded warmly for those pastimes and exercises which are manly and healthful. The procedds of the lecture was given to the Ladies' Association of the first Presbyterian Church.

MR. LASHER'S CONCERT.—We were present at Mr. Lasher's Concert the other evening, and were extremely delighted with the performances; the little folks sang extremely well. Nothing could be considered more pleasing or more interesting than their little faces singing with might and main. We hope that Mr. Lasher will give another before very long, and that many parents will make a point to attend. One word more—we would advise Mr. Lasher in future to leave the vocal department to the young performers—it was really charming.

....The rumor is again current of a probable visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to the Court of the Tuileries.

....The Daily News is informed that the Great Eastern has been purchased on account of the French Government for a sum approaching to a quarter of a million pounds sterling. The sale, however, is not to interfere with her present engagements, which include the submersion of the Atlantic cable.

....The demand for money at the Bank of England continued large, even on the advancing rate of 9 per cent. The charge was as high as 10 per cent in exceptionable cases. In open market great caution was displayed, but there was no panic.

....An Irish grievance petition to which 400,000 signatures are appended, has been presented to the House of Commons by the Lord Mayor of Dublin at the bar of the House. The petition sets forth that Irish manufacturing industry suffers by partial legislation; that 200,000 of the people have left "the old sod" in the last twenty years, and that the chief cause of the latter calamity is the unsettled state of the relations between landlord and tenant.

....The Spaniards are acting in a high handed manner towards Peru. A Peruvian war vessel has been seized by them, possession has been taken of the Guano Islands and the Spanish flag has been hoisted over them, and the Peruvian fleet was only saved from falling into their hands by placing itself under the guns of the fort at Callao. There was great excitement at Callao and Lima. It is generally supposed that the whole thing is part of the French scheme, and that the programme has been all pre-arranged.

It will be seen by the despatches brought by the "Persia" that the Conference on the Danish question has been adjourned. Leading English papers are of opinion that the attempt to smooth matters by mere talking had better at once be abandoned. The Post—generally understood to be Palmerston's organ—uses very strong language. Divisions in the Cabinet are reported, and no one appears to have a very definite idea as to the best course to pursue. Meantime, the allies are endeavoring to complete the annexation of Denmark.

....A lady in Cleveland, Ohio, died recently of cholera, a malady of which she had a great horror. Before her death she requested that her body might be placed in a metallic coffin, and that it might be filled with the liquor in which she had been embalmed, "for," said she, "I have always heard that the Yankees will steal anything they can get their hands on, and I know they will steal my body if they can get it."

To Consumptives.—Advertiser, who has been restored to health in a few weeks, after having suffered for several years with a severe lung affection, and that dreadful scourge, Consumption, is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure. To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, &c. Those wishing the prescription will please address, Rev. EDWARD A. WILSON, Williamsburgh, Kings Co., New York.

The Examiner and Toronto Globe.—Probably any question of difference between contending parties, Political, Clerical, Military or personal, could, subsequently they have to be settled by appointed umpires, be more quickly settled than by reference to the columns of the Globe newspaper. This is the case with the "Canadian Illustrated News." Ancient history does not relate, and modern history cannot tell, when it has referred from the various points of discussion, whether civil, military, moral, literary, &c. Sold by all Medicine Dealers at 25 cts per bottle.

Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry.—This sterling remedy appears to be working wonders. We have so long heard of its superior merit in diseases of the Throat and Lungs that we doubt not its claim of being "The Great Remedy."—Many of our most respected citizens who appreciate its uncommon worth from personal use have attested to the fact by their written testimonials. These are strong recommendations, and should certainly prompt all who suffer from pulmonary complaints in their various forms, to give it a trial.—Ottawa Citizen.

BLETCHER'S CANADIAN CLOTHES WRINGER

COMBINES more Strength of Frame, Capacity for Pressure, and Power of Action, than any other in the market. We manufacture five sizes intended for and adapted to Families, Hotels, Laundries, &c.

Bletcher's Canadian Clothes Wringer

Saves Time, Labor, Clothes and Money.

It will wear for years without repair!

No Servant can break it!

A Child ten years old can operate it!

No cushion or shield required in its use!

It will wring anything from a Thread to the Heaviest Quilt.

It saves its Cost in Clothing

Every six or nine Months.

The water can be pressed from large and small articles easier, quicker and more thoroughly than by the ordinary old fashioned hand-wringing, by the shortest and most disheartening process.

It is easily and firmly secured to the Tub or Washing Machine and will fit Tubs of any shape or size. Every Wringer is warranted to give perfect satisfaction, either with or without gear running; and in the event of any part becoming broken or wearing out within twelve months, we will furnish a new piece free of charge, on return of broken piece, as the following will testify:

No. 1, size inch roll.....$5 00
2, " and a half inch roll..... 4 75
3, " inch roll..... 4 50
4, Wringer inch roll..... 3 75
5, Wringer inch roll..... 3 50

We keep all the sizes always on hand at all times at our Sewing Machine Office, over Mr. H. White's shoe store,

George Street, Peterborough.

J. Z. ROGERS.

Ashburnham, April, 1864. 14-tf

PEACE.—Poor Brown, who is married, says the only reason he ever has, is a piece of his lady's mind.

THE RIGHT MAN IN THE RIGHT PLACE.—A bedmaker binds in May morning.

Some of the young ladies say that the times are so hard that the young men cannot get clothes.

It is impossible to look at the sleepers in a church without being reminded that Sunday, is a day of rest.

Wedderburn asked Sheridan how he got rid of his Irish brogue, as he wished to get rid of his Scotch accent.

"My dear fellow," said Sheridan, "don't attempt such a thing! the house listens to you now because they don't understand you; if you become intelligible, they will be able to take your measure."

How beautiful is woman when adversity frowns upon her sister! It is touching to behold the segregation with which a generous sex her best friend compelled, by circumstances, to put down her carriage and appease her lady's maid.—Punch.

HUMANITY REWARDED.—In France the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty does not enjoy the popular respect which it deserves, the "wits" of the capital indulging in no smaller variety of inhuman jests on the subject. Lately, however, a countryman presented himself before the president of the society and claims the first prize. He is armed to the teeth, the act of humanity for which he demands the meed of honor.

"I have saved the life of a wolf," replied the countryman. "I might easily have killed him with this bludgeon;" and he swung his weapon in the air, to the astonishment of the president.

"But where is the wolf?" inquired the latter, "what has he done to you?"

"He has just devoured my wife," was the quick reply. The president collapses at once and then says, "My friend, I am of opinion that you have been sufficiently rewarded.

"Just say how many seasons are there?"

"Six; spring summer autumn, winter, opera seasons, and Thompson's Seasons."

"Tommy, what does b-e-a-s-t spell?"

"Don't know, ma'am."

"What—you little numskul—what are you learning at school for?"

"Please, ma'am, to get out of the way of the cane."

In the story of the courtship of a loving couple, after all had been arranged and matters fixed up the narrator says:

"Here they both came together, and their report which followed was like pulling a horse's hoof out of the mire."

Because asked Jemima, a few days since, if she had seen her "vegetable friend?"

"My vegetable friend! Who is that?"

"Why, the young man I met you with yesterday, who has carroty hair, reddish whiskers and a turnip nose."

The following rather hard hits by way of definition, not to be found in Johnson, may crush a smile:

TRAGEDIAN.—A fellow with a turpot on his head who talks about the stage and gets into a violent passion for so much a night.

CRITIC A bad dog that goes unchained and barks at everything he does not comprehend.

Esquire — Everybody, yet nobody; a title indiscriminately applied to all sorts of people.

Jury—Twelve prisoners in a box to try one or more at the bar.

Lawyer—A learned gentleman, who removes your estate from your enemy and keeps it himself.

Dentist—A person who finds work for his own teeth by taking out those of other people.

Policeman—A man who is paid so much a week to keep out of the way when he is wanted.

A CAT caught a sparrow and was about to devour it, but the sparrow said,

"No gentleman eats till he washes his face."

The cat, struck with this remark, set the sparrow down, and began to wash his face with his paw, but the sparrow flew away. This vexed puss extremely, and he said,

"As long as I live, I will eat first and wash my face afterwards"—which all cats do, even to this day.

"Pa, how many legs has a ship?"

"A ship has no legs, my child."

"Why, pa, the paper says she draws twenty feet, and that she runs before the wind."

"Well, Jane, this is a queer world," said Joe to his sister; "a sect of women philosophers has just sprung up."

"Indeed," said Jane, "and what do they hold?"

"The strongest thing in nature," said Joe "their tongues!"

Dr. Franklin used to say that rich widowers had the best second-hand goods that ever came to market.

They have a chestnut horse raised at Hartford.

One imprisons in a State Prison, and the other at a cemetery.

Heads and tails: Jane—Patrick! the horse you are leading, Patrick; he carries his head well.

Pat—that's true, sa' it's a grand tail that he carries behind him.

Jane—Behind him. Don't everything that carries a tail carry it behind him?

Pat—No, yer honor.

Jane—No? What don't?

Pat—A halfpenny, sure, carries its tail on one side and its head on the other.

"SAM," said an interesting young mother to her youngest hopeful, "do you know what the difference is between body and soul? The soul, my child, is what you love with; the body carries you about. This is your body," touching the little fellow's shoulders and arms: "but there is something deeper in. You can feel it now. What is it?"

"Oh, I know," said Sam, with a flash of intelligence in his eyes "that's my dickey shirt!"

A ROMANCE: CHIEFLY RETIRED.—They met in the street, and they sigh, passing by. Meet again, and its plain that they're both nothing loth man and wife to be for life.

"Dear," says he," you love me?"

"Yes I do. Pray, do you love me too?"

"Ye-s."

"Is I ock Mame

Off he goes, to propose and receives mother's leave.

Ma says "Will."

You may guess with what joy he capers, certain treaten, by whom with to his wish to, furnish for him soon a fit house. When that's done, they're made one by a priest give a feast; out of what—honeymoon—kisses, kisses, kisses, kisses—what a tale of true love this is.

PATENT WATER-DRAWER!

AT REDUCED RATES.

You must remember that by buying one of my Water-drawers, you get your water pure, which you cannot do by a suction Pump, I warrant them not to freeze, and to stand as long, if not longer, than any Pump in use, besides, you save over fifty per cent. I can sell them cheaper than any Pump-maker in Canada. If anything goes wrong by fair play within one year from the time of purchase, I bind myself to re-place it; so you cannot be deceived. Now, any one who is in need of a Pump would do well to get one of my Water-drawers at once. I have two teams out at all times to deliver them, and persons residing at a distance will receive prompt attention by sending a letter to the undersigned.

Select Poetry.

A LOCK OF FLAXEN HAIR.

I have a lock of flaxen hair,
Wraps in a tuny fold;
'Tis hoarded with a miser's care,
'Tis dearer far than gold.
To other eyes of little worth,
Yet precious unto mine;
For once, dear child, in life and health,
It was a lock of thine.

The numbered hours pass slowly by;
Days, weeks and months depart,
Yet still the veriest place remains
Unchanged within the heart;
The loneliness is still the same,
The same great want is there,
While memory loves to brood upon
The simple lock of hair,

The cold winds seem to sigh more loud,
When shades of evening fall,
The clock with more impressive sound
Ticks louder on the wall;
For now no artless words I hear,
No smiling face I see;
No tones of childish mirth break forth,
So dear to home and me.

'Tis past—'tis gone—like some strange dream
That lingers with the mind;
Some pleasant dream of happiness
The heart hath left behind;
An atom from the fading dust,
A relic of the past,
That tells of transient hopes and joys,
Of things that could not last.

'Tis all that now remains of thee,
Light of our home and hearth;
While sadly pass the silent hours,
And dark the days come forth.
Yet still I keep it for thy sake,
And guard it with fond care:
And oft I view with throbbing heart,
Thy simple lock of hair.

THE RESOLVE.

A TRUE MASONIC STORY.

It was a cosy little parlor, just room enough for four happy inmates. The shutters were closed, for it was evening, and the tastefully embroidered curtains fell in graceful folds and touched the soft carpet upon the floor. The fire was all a glow in the grate, for it was winter and very cold without.

This was the house of Edward Berton: this his cherry little parlor. That amiable looking woman is his, and those two pretty children are his; Charlie, a noble boy, and sweet little Agnes—the pet of the household. "Me," whispered Charlie, "is'nt Pa going to the party to-night?" "I don't know, my boy, go ask him yourself," said the mother with a beaming smile. Charlie was soon pulling at his papa's sleeve: "Aint you going to Mr. Selwin's to-night? I'll go to bed; and little sis can stay in Sarah's room, and you and ma can go." Charlie said all this in a hurried manner. He had an idea that he was of some importance; as most children have, and did not like to have his Ma to say to her friends who might call on her to-morrow, "I could not go last night on account of the children." No, he did not like that; and then he was a very kind and considerate little fellow, that wished his parents to go because he thought they would enjoy themselves.

"No, Charlie," said the father, after a moment's pause; "no, I can't go to Mr. Selwin's—I must go to the Lodge;" and Mr. Berton tied on his cloak and cap, for though the moon and stars shone brightly in the heavens, it was a bitter cold night. One would suppose that a man must have a strong inducement to venture out on such a night; and so Mr. Berton had. It was not the gay assemblage or flattering crowd that called him from his quiet and comfortable parlor that night, but a call from those warm hearts and generous souls, whose friendship was true and abiding—those whose chief aim was to do good to all—especially to the household of the faithful.

After his father had left the parlor, Charlie sat looking into the fire: at length he raised his eyes to his mother's face and said—"Why did Pa go to the Lodge to-night, instead of attending the party?" "Your father always does what he thinks best, my son, and he has doubtless good reasons for preferring the lodge to-night before the party. He is one of the officers, and it is very necessary that he should be there. He may tell you more about it on the morning; it is now time my little son was in his bed."

Mr. Berton returned that night at a later hour than usual. Nor did he return alone: he led into the room a little boy about the size of Charlie. Mrs. B. was not a little surprised, but an explanation was soon given. A stranger had lately come to the city and engaged in an honest, but not lucrative business. Some few weeks after his arrival he was seized with a malignant fever which soon terminated fatally. He left no family, with the exception of a little son nine years old. The lady in whose family he boarded said that, the morning on which he died, he gave his son a very pretty little pin. A gentleman, (a true Mason,) was one of the few who attended to the preparation for the stranger's burial. The lady brought and showed to him the gift of the dying father. An earnest look of surprise was visible at once in the Mason's face, for on the pin was discovered the true symbol of the Order, and deeply engraved in the gold were the mystic words—Faith, Hope, Charity.

Soon the room was filled with noble-hearted men, and with true fraternal kindness and respect they followed the remains of the stranger to their last resting place, and threw their sprigs of evergreen—emblem of immortal hope—into the grave of that stranger-brother.

The next night was the time of meeting for the Lodge, and important business claimed the attention of the members. The little orphan boy must not be neglected, nor left to drift like a waif upon the rough sea of life. On examining the stranger's effects, after his burial, an old dilapidated pocket-book was found away down in the bottom of his trunk, apparently preserved with much care. This, together with his last gift to his now orphan child, with mystic sign and words upon it, they deemed sufficient evidence that the stranger had been a worthy member of a Lodge in the city of M——. The cause of the fatherless child was brought before the Lodge. Who would take that child, feed, clothe, educate and care for him? This was a test of the gentleness of masonic principles among the membership; would those Holy principles now be tarnished by a refusal to care for the helpless orphan of a deceased brother? The question was quickly answered—no!

Mr. Berton at once offered to take the child to his own home, protect, and provide for it. After a little consultation, it was agreed that Mr. Berton should take charge of the orphan. His family was small, his means ample; and we have already seen the little stranger—Herbert Willford—introduced into the kind-hearted Mason's family at the hour of midnight. Mrs. B. looked upon the child in tender sorrow and regard, then led him gently into little Charlie's bed-room, told him that was her little boy sleeping there, and asked him in tones of maternal kindness, if he knew a prayer to say before he went to bed. "I used to say one to Ma, but she is dead now; then I said it to Pa, but he is dead too," and the eyes of the orphan filled with tears. "Well, say it to me; you're my boy now," said the kind Mrs. B. The infant-prayer was repeated, and sleep—rosy childhood's sleep—closed the eyes of the weary one.

Morning came, and Charlie was not a little surprised to find another occupant in his bed. He sprang up, hastily dressed, and ran to his mother's room to inquire who the intruder, as he termed him, was. His mother related to him the story we have already repeated; gave him some good advice, told him he must be very kind to Bertie, for he was an orphan—alone—and had no kind father or mother to care for him. At this moment Herbert entered the family sitting room. The two little boys were not strangers long. Breakfast over, they started for the school-room; in the evening they chatted, played with their tops, and were on the best of terms. Bertie retired early, the evening after his arrival, while Charlie sat by his father's side waiting for him to lay down the evening paper which seemed to engross his attention. It was at length folded and laid upon the stand, and Charlie at length ventured to speak of that which had been the subject of his childish thoughts all the evening.

"Pa, I know why you did'nt go to the party last night." "Well, why, Charlie?" "Because you're a Mason, and you wanted to bring little Bertie to me. He's a good boy, and he's my own brother. I'm so glad you did not go to Mr. Selwin's party last night." But I can't see why the Masons like other people so well." "I hope sometime my little son will know why we love other people so much," replied Mr. Berton. Charlie's face wore a kind of puzzled look; and he soon after said good night to his parents, went to his little room and laid himself down by the side of Bertie.

Weeks and months passed away, and very happily, too. Bertie had a sweet temper and gentle disposition, which made him quite a favorite in Mr. Berton's family. Charlie was one year older than Bertie, and there was a great deal of difference in the appearance of the children. Herbert's light hair, fair complexion, and gentle blue eyes contrasted strongly with the dark brown locks, ruddy cheeks, and lustrous black eyes of Charley, it was hard to decide which was the prettiest.

One evening after they had returned from school, Mrs. B. observed an unusual color in the face of Bertie; his cheeks, naturally pale were now flushed; he said he felt very well, only a little soreness in his throat. Mrs. B. felt alarmed, for scarlet fever was prevailing to a fearful extent among the children of the city. Bertie retired early, but his sleep was troubled. By two o'clock the disease had assumed an alarming type; the family physician was summoned, but the skill of the faculty was baffled: the child must die!

It was the first evening after his attack; the gentle moonlight streamed across the bed of the dying boy; stars, bright and beautiful were peering through the shutters; snow covered the earth with a mantle of white, stainless and pure as innocence itself. The family had gathered round the sufferer's couch, while Charlie, with sobs that came from his very heart, hid his face in his mother's lap. "Charlie," called his little companion in gentle tones. "Charlie, I'm dying: I'm not afraid—just now I saw an angel with such bright wings! It called me, Bertie—it was my mother; she said Pa was waiting. Charlie, bring my little box." It was given him; "Here, this is yours now. Pa gave it to me when he was dying; keep it and don't forget Bertie;" and he gave the pen with its mystic emblems to Charlie. "Oh, I'm so cold. Good bye uncle—auntie—little Agnes; good bye Char——," the angel had come, and Bertie's spirit was with those who had loved him on earth.

The next day they scraped away the snow to make a little grave, and the last sad duty was discharged to the stranger-orphan. On the evening after the funeral Charlie sat by the fire looking very sad. "Pa," said he, "I will be a Freemason!" "What makes my little son so earnest to-night?" replied Mr. Berton. "I was just thinking about our little Bertie. It is just a year to-night since you brought him home, and, Pa, if you had not been a Freemason I might never have known Bertie. He went to school with me, he had clothes and good m use, and slept in my bed every night; and I'm sure if you had not been a Freemason you would not have known anything about Bertie. Yes, I will be a Freemason," repeated Charlie with great emphasis, "and I'll go to the Lodge every night." "I hope Charlie will be a true-hearted Mason," said the affectionate father.

The boyish resolve made that night was never forgotten. Charlie is now a [illegible] and a Mason, generous, just, and true; but he says the most impressive lesson given him on charity was in his father's own household, taught him in his childhood years, during the short stay of Bertie in their family. That incident did more towards fixing good determinations in his mind than years of theoretical teaching would have done. He does not forget his early friend and playmate, and very sacredly does he keep the last gift of the dying orphan, and often recalls the night on which he took his boyish resolution. Many acts of love and kindness are done by this noble Mason; the first impulse to which was given by the father in the adoption of that little orphan stranger.

Brother, there is enough for you to do. Many sorrowing hearts are there in this sad and weary world of ours. Go, search for the needy and suffering; see them to the lonely orphan. May be it is thy brother's child. The spirit of that departed brother will look down upon you from its bright home in the upper Temple, I ween, as from the portals of the Lodge—that grand and heavenly lodge above. It will follow you as you go forth on your errand of Mercy, and smile benignantly upon your deeds. Go, brother, to the home of the widow, and comfort those stricken hearts, while in your hands you bear the beautiful symbols of your Order—FAITH—HOPE—CHARITY.—Masonic Review.

Manufacture of India Rubber.

India-rubber was introduced into France in 1776. Dr. Priestly says that, in 1791, he saw a specimen of the gum at a stationer's, where it was used to erase pencil-marks—hence its name. In 1823 five hundred pairs of shoes, made by the natives of South America directly from the exudations of the gum-bearing tree, were imported into this country, and sold at Boston. In the 1832, 1833, 1835, and 1836, several manufactories were established in New England for making India-rubber goods.

Upon their introduction into market it was found that the goods became clammy and sticky when exposed to heat, and were stiffened by the cold. They were therefore useless. In consequence of these defects, in 1839 all the companies and manufactories were ruined. The manufacture was utterly prostrated. At this time a simple workman in Connecticut, named Hayward, who had undertaken to carry on the manufacture by himself, who, to use his own words, hired the shop he worked in, and whose only income from the uncertain profits of his business was five hundred dollars a year, sought day and night to discover some substance which might be combined with the India-rubber and cure its defects. Absorbed in the search of what to him was the philosopher's stone, "he dreamed at night," as he asserts, that the desired solvent was sulphur. He combined the rubber with sulphur, and, to his delight, discovered that the defects in the goods were almost wholly overcome. He had miraculously, as it were, discovered a substance which combined chemically with the rubber, making, in fact, a sulphuret of rubber—indeed, a new substance, whose structure is fibrous like horn, whereas the structure of rubber alone is granular, or molecular. He obtained a patent for his discovery; but being heavily in debt, and perhaps unable to conceive of the vast consequences which would result from his invention, sold the right to his invention for a mere pittance to Mr. Goodyear. The latter experimented upon the new compound discovered by Hayward, and discovered the art of vulcanizing it. This invention is thus described by Mr. Webster, in his great speech at Trenton: "The great peculiarity of this vulcanized process is this: If you take a compound of sulphur and rubber in a dry state and grind and mix them together, and apply heat, the consequence is, that the substance softens and softens as the degree of heat increases until it reaches a certain height in the thermometer, say 212 o Fahrenheit, and and along there, a little more or less.—Well, anybody," says Mr. Webster," who ever tried the effect, to see what would be the operation upon this compound, and finding that it ran up to a great degree of heat, softening and rendering it more and more plastic as the degree of heat was augmented, would naturally be of the opinion that if the heat was carried still higher. But Mr. Goodyear, as the result of untiring experiment, found out that, although the application of heat produced a melting effect upon this compound, rendering it more and more plastic and soft as the degree of heat augmented, yet when the heat, going on, had got up to a certain much higher degree, its effect was the reverse of what it had been, and then the rubber composition commenced to vulcanize and harden, and in fact to make metallic the vegetable substance." The result of the two inventions is thus stated by Mr. Webster: "It introduced quite a new material into the manufacture of the arts, that material being nothing less than elastic metal. It is hard like metal, and elastic as pure gum-elastic. Why this is as great and momentous a phenomenon occurring to man in the progress of their knowledge, as it would be for a man to show that iron and gold could remain iron and gold, and yet become elastic like India-rubber." Mr. Goodyear obtained a patent for his discovery, and granted licenses to manufacture under his and Hayward's patents. The manufacture at once revived. Twenty years afterwards the yearly sale of goods created by these inventions in the city of Boston alone was set down at $9,500,000. Thousands of operatives are employed in their manufacture. The uses to which the vulcanized rubber is applied are innumerable, and now mon are discovered every day. Waterproof shoes, clothing, tents, pantoons, blankets for soldiers—invaluable as they have been proved in our service, preventing the loss of thousands of lives, and promoting the health and comfort of the soldier to a degree beyond estimation—buckets, hose pressure, mail bags, car springs, suspenders, pistol cases, combs, pens, are only a few of the countless articles made, specimens of which may be seen in the beautiful collection deposited by Mr. Goodyear in the saloons of this office. There is probably not a family in the country that does not use these goods, and there is hardly an instance on record in which inventions have within so short a period become so essential to general comfort and convenience.

It is unnecessary to say that this great manufacture was founded upon the invention which the patent privilege gave to the inventors, and the protection which the patents have given to the manufacturers.—Artizan.

THE REV. DR. DUFF.

The South African Advertiser, of March 19, contains the following regarding the famous missionary of the Free Church of Scotland, the state of whose health, besides causing great anxiety to his many friends in this country and throughout the civilized world, has necessitated his quitting India for ever, where he has so long and unceasingly laboured. The Rev. Dr. Duff, who started for Cape Town about three weeks ago, travelling overland, has reached Graham's Town. The numerous friends and admirers of the great missionary will be glad to learn that, though still very weak, his health has considerably improved since he landed in this colony.—Where he went there was a most anxious desire to see him, and, if possible, hear a speech or sermon from the "old man eloquent;" but his health did not permit of such exertion. On his arrival at Port Elizabeth, Dr. Duff was so weak that it was out of the question to expect any public addresses from him; but several small companies had the pleasure of meeting him in private, and they will not soon forget the "winged words" which he addressed to them. On these occasions the old fire would burst out now and then, and though (in his own words) "every fibre of his body was unstrung," there was still reigning within him the unconquerable desire to be spent in his Master's service. After visiting the Free Church and other mission stations in British Kaffraria, Dr. Duff proposes to travel overland to Natal.

ELOPEMENT.

About two or three weeks ago the inhabitants of Norwood had an accession to their number, by the arrival of a man his wife and child, of the name of Woodcock. It appears they had lived at a place called the Narrows; the husband had had cause to harbor feelings of jealousy against a young man named Hardy, who had been stopping with them, and finding it impossible to get rid of his Hardy-ness, removed to Norwood. The young lady was too Hardy to be thus snubbed, for the very next day he followed them to Norwood making their house his home. The husband of course ever on the guard, was anything but satisfied with the honesty of spouse. Various schemes were proposed to him, by the Hardy young man and the still more hardy wife, to secure his absence, for a short period, but all failed, until Monday last, when Hardy, having stated that he was going off on a journey, on some business, the husband at the earnest solicitation of his "better half," was persuaded to go back to the Narrows, for the purpose of finding their old cow, and bringing it to Norwood. Accordingly, off he trudged, leaving "my lady" at home, all alone. Not meeting with success, in his search for the old cow, he returned, to find no one in his house, but his child. His faithless rib, and her Hardy friend, had left for parts unknown, taking everything with them that was available. The despicable woman, who is middle-aged, left her child behind her, as well as two others, who are living with some of their precious neighbors, in the vicinity of the Narrows.—Hastings Messenger.

The New Steamer "Peruvian."

The Montreal Ocean Steamship Company's new screw-steamer "Peruvian," Captain Ballantyne, is a ship of exceedingly beautiful proportions, being long, and presenting very fine lines from whatever point she may be viewed. Her extreme length is 320 feet; she is 38½ feet of moulded width; and is 32 feet deep in the hold. Her gross tonnage is 2,258 and her nett 1,900 register. She is propelled by two engines having a combined power of 450 nominal, but indicating 2,000 horse power. They are fixed direct acting engines, with cylinders 84 inches in diameter, and a stroke of 2 feet 6 inches, and they are furnished with Spencer's patent surface condensing apparatus, which contains tubing not less than a mile in length, and which is found to act with great certainty and efficiency, the whole of the machinery working with great smoothness. The steam for these engines is supplied by four boilers fired by sixteen furnaces, which are coaled athwart ship. The "Peruvian" is a strongly constructed iron ship, built of the best materials, and on improved principles. She is divided into six water-tight compartments by five strong bulkheads, which rise from the keel completely up the upper deck, thus affording additional security against accident by fire or from water. She has four decks, her upper or shelter deck being flush with what are usually considered the bulwarks, and as it is only fenced in by bettings, she cannot ship back, thus keeping the whole of the ship dry and comfortable under any condition of weather. The "Peruvian" is furnished with a powerful double actioned screw steering apparatus worked by a double wheel, which in case of any accident occurring to the screw rudder-regulator, can be connected with the rudder by the common tiller chains. In compliance with the regulations of the Board of Trade, the passenger accommodation is confined to the two upper decks; equal to the conveyance of a thousand troops, including a hundred and fifty officers and non-commissioned officers, with their military stores. The dining saloon is seventy-four feet in length by thirty-seven feet wide; lighted by [illegible] sky-light lanterns, and ornamented on the ceiling by gold mouldings. The state rooms for the cabin passengers are on the deck below the saloon, and they are sufficiently numerous to accommodate 140 individuals. The accommodation for second class and steerage passengers is also of an excellent character, and has already proved herself a capital boat, and very fast under a moderate pressure of steam, having made 14 knots per hour on her first trip.—Liverpool Courier, 12th.

Singular Case of Double Marriage.

The Wheeling Intelligencer gives the following:

When the war first broke out, a young married man of Steubenville volunteered in the service of his country, left his young wife and child, and went forth to fight his country's battles. His regiment was hotly engaged at the battle of Perryville, and he was reported among the killed.—Indeed there seemed to be no doubt as to the fact of his death, several of his comrades declaring that they had seen him fall, and knew where he was buried. The sad news of his death was brought home to his wife, and after the first storm of bitter sorrow had subsided, she determined to have his remains brought home.

She was assisted in her undertaking by kind friends, and two months or more after, a metallic coffin, containing what purported to be the remains of the supposed deceased, was brought to Steubenville, and with the accustomed burial rites, was deposited in the cemetery.

There were no doubts entertained as to death in the manner stated, and the young wife, after mourning his demise for over a year, received and accepted a second offer of marriage. Her present husband is a worthy man, and during the four or five months since their marriage they have been living in undisturbed happiness.

But at last a shadow has eclipsed their sunshine. A few days since an exchanged prisoner, just from the South, passed through Steubenville, and left a message from the supposed deceased husband for his wife, stating that he was a prisoner in the hands of the rebels, alive and well, and as he was in daily expectation of being exchanged, she might expect him home in a very short time. The situation of the lady and husband can better be imagined than described under the circumstances.—Though this is rather a remarkable case, it is one which, during the present state of the country, might be of more frequent occurrence.

A DESPERATE PRIZE FIGHT.

Our readers will remember Frank Tessot, who figured in a prize-fight at Sandwich a few years ago. We remembered not long since that a fight had been arranged for two thousand five hundred dollars between Tessot and Joseph Ciboni, of Philadelphia. Tessot is a Frenchman, and has for some time resided in this State. His weight is one hundred and fifty-four pounds. Ciboni is an Italian—weight one hundred and ninety-nine pounds. He has figured in numerous fights, having left nine of his antagonists dead on the field. The fight came off as arranged, on the first day of May, at Oporto, a little town near the Grand Trunk Road, about five hundred miles from this city. The day was snowy and unpleasant, but a large crowd assembled to witness the fight, which lasted altogether nine hours, fifty-six rounds being fought. Both men were knocked down, and blood drawn on each on the first round. It was fought with the greatest spirit and determination throughout, one or the other being knocked down on each round. On the last round, as the ground was slippery and snowy, Tessot's foot slipped, and he came down upon his knees. Ciboni immediately caught him around the neck and checked him. Tessot, by a desperate effort, raised himself, and buried Ciboni upon his back, placed his knee upon his breast, crushing it completely, and struck him five blows in the face, battering it to one bleeding, shapeless mass. Ciboni expired without a struggle or a groan. Tessot is now lying in a hopeless condition, having been given up by his physician. It was one of the most desperate fights on record.—Detroit Free Press, May 11.

A GOOD MOVE.

We are informed that a joint stock company has been organised in Quebec for the purpose of working the Marmora Iron Works. Agents are now in Cleveland and Chicago collecting information in relation to the western market for pig iron, and it appears their reports are very favorable. It is proposed to build a railroad from Marmora to a place on Trent river called Healey's Falls, a distance of ten miles, thence from there to Harwood, from Harwood to Cobourg over our line, where the ore will be melted and shipped to the western markets. The plans are complete and the project very promising. Apart from the number of hands such works would employ around Cobourg, the increase to our Harbor revenues would be incredible. The great difficulty now is the position of the railroad. It is in the hands of a few men who can make no use of it themselves, and who wont allow any one else to get it lest it might interfere with the Port Hope road, in which these gentlemen are also concerned. Now, if the project is about to be carried out, is it fair, that while the Town is paying the interest of the money that built the Railroad, a few private individuals should be allowed to keep it idle in their hands, and perhaps deprive the Town of the advantage such a trade would confer, and perhaps drive the Company to Trenton or Belleville. We trust the matter will soon receive the attention of our leading men.—Cobourg Sentinel.

"I shall not be frightened that, for I never knew you [illegible] to pay anything you owed."

THE TEMPERANCE BILL.

We have received a copy of Mr. Dunkin's Bill to amend the laws in force respecting the sale of intoxicating Liquors, and the issuing of Licenses therefor, and otherwise for repression of abuse resulting from such sale. It has passed the third reading in the Lower House, and will probably pass the Upper House without much alteration. We expect much benefit from the faithful carrying out of the provisions of this Act. We confess we were never very sanguine of the passing of a straighter Maine Law. So many conflicting interests are at work to oppose the passing of such a law, and people hold so many opinions as to the wisdom of such an enactment, that however desirable it might appear, we have always held it to be almost too Eutopian; but the Bill now about to become the law of the land, will go far towards remedying the abuses against which so many and so just complaints have been made.

The Bill is divided into two parts: The first thirty-seven clauses contain provisions for regulating the sale of Intoxicating Liquors. The balance of the Bill is composed of provisions to be in force irrespective of local prohibition. The first section provides that any Municipality may pass a By-law for prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors, and the issue of licenses therefor within such Municipality. We believe that Municipal Councils have had some such powers for a considerable period; but from the fact that the powers were vested in the Municipal Councillors who were too often, especially in the cities, under the influence of the Liquor interest, it has never to our knowledge, been acted upon. Now, however, the power of passing such a law is not in their hands only but also in the hands of the Ratepayers themselves. Any twenty or more duly qualified electors of a Municipality may at any time by a requisition signed by them, and by them delivered to the Clerk of the Municipality, propose a By-law for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in said Municipality, a poll will then be taken, and the views of the Electors generally be recorded, and if a majority are in favor of the By-law it shall become law.

Two or more Municipalities may join in approving of such a By-law, and after being submitted to the electors of said Municipalities thus jointly acting, it will only be lawful for any one of the Municipalities so joined, to withdraw from the Temperance Union after the sense of the Electors in all the said Municipalities has again been taken by a poll and a majority have voted for a repeal of the By-law. A whole county may be united also for the making of such a By-law either through the action of the Municipal Councils of the County, or on the requisition of twenty or more electors of each Township of said County—but before such a By-law can be passed on the requisition of the electors it must have been submitted to a vote, and if a majority of votes are polled for such a By-law, it shall be held to be approved and vice versa. To repeal a By-law that has been passed by the Municipal Council and the people, a vote of the people must again be taken, but a year must have elapsed before such repeal can be attempted, and if the Municipal Council have themselves proposed such a By-law, and have submitted it to the Electors for approval, two years must elapse ere such repeal can be attempted.

Provided the Temperance men fail to pass such a very desirable by-law at their first voting, they may again in two years try it by a new requisition. We believe this part of the Bill to be extremely judicious. It is a great step in the right direction, and we have no hesitation in stating our belief that ere many years pass there will be hundreds of Municipalities in Canada to which the sale of intoxicating liquors will be prohibited. It is quite true that at first it will meet great opposition, the liberty of the subject will be in danger and a tremendous outcry will be made—and even respectable men will be found voting against such a By-law; but public opinion is gaining strength on this question, and not many years can elapse before a man will be looked down upon who dares to vote nay on such requisitions. We hope soon to see this question agitated in every Municipality in the County of Peterborough, and advise the temperance men not to do anything hastily, recollect that if you fail in your first attempt two years must elapse before you can make another agitate the question thoroughly, and place the matter distinctly before the electors, and they cannot fail to see it in its true light. Immoderate indulgence in strong drink is the greatest social evil among the people of the British Empire; it does more to people our prisons, fill our Halks and Penetentiaries, and affords more victims to the scaffold than all other sources of evil whatever.

Section 12 provides that from the day such By-law takes effect, and for so long as it continues in force, no person, unless for medical or sacramental purposes, or for use in the arts, shall sell, or cause for sale, any spirituous liquors—under a penalty of fifty dollars for each offence; and a procedure may be brought in the name of the Collector of Inland Revenue or in the name of the Corporation, or by any person whether authorized by the Municipality or not. No prosecution shall be dismissed for any defect, informality, error or omission; and if such prosecution be dismissed, the justice, should he be of the opinion there was probable cause for the complaint, shall not award costs against the prosecutor. Where judgment is rendered against any one violating this Act, the Justice may, if he see fit call on the defendant to declare whether or not he possess sufficient goods to satisfy the same, and if the Justice is not satisfied that such goods are available to satisfy the penalty and costs, he may send defendant to the common jail for a period of not less than one nor more than three months, or until he satisfy the claim against him. No appeal shall be allowed from any such conviction to any court whatever.

All the provisions of the first 37 sections of this Act seem extremely judicious, and seem as if framed for practical purposes.—The difficulty of conducting prosecutions under this act have been made as light as possible, and the onus of proof has been made as light as consistent with due regard to justice.

In our next we will call attention to the remaining clauses of this Act, consisting of several provisions irrespective of local prohibition, they are extremely stringent, and we have no doubt will be peculiarly obnoxious to the proprietors of the various shebeen shops both in cities and in country places.—The toleration of places solely for the retailing of intoxicating drink has been too long a blot on the statute book. There are thousands of such places in the country licensed for no other purpose but to afford facilities to the drunkard.

TIMBER.

We believe the running between Lakefield and Peterborough is much improved, at least we see far fewer cribs passing the Bridge in a damaged condition. The river too, has fallen considerably, and the difficulty of managing the timber must be correspondingly lessened. We hope the booms will hold good for the remainder of the season, for independently of the danger to the raftsmen, the loss by re-rafting must be very considerable. We paid a visit yesterday to the Little Lake and found it pretty full of timber. We went on board one or two rafts, some of them are certainly very fine,—and the average, for the Otonabee, very large. On enquiry we learned they were the property of Messrs. Cockburn & Son, of Kirkfield, in the neighboring County of Victoria. We were informed that these gentlemen had brought over 450,000ft. past Peterborough this season; over 200,000ft. of which had been hauled a distance of ten or twelve miles from the further side of the Talbot River. This was as fine and clear a raft as we have seen for a long time, and averaged 90ft. The same gentlemen have sent off over 200,000ft. from Port Hope Harbor, part of which is now in Quebec, and the remainder, which was all bought on the Railroad bank early in May, has already not only been carried over the Port Hope Road, but been rafted up and sent off, and on Tuesday last was passing Montreal.—Such despatch in the shipment of timber has rarely been equalled and speaks well for the energy and business tact of the gentlemen concerned. We were informed that Messrs. Cockburn & Son had another raft which was out on the east shore of Lake Simcoe, and would soon be ready for dispatch from Toronto—in this was about 175,000ft. We observed some other large blocks of timber on the opposite side of the Lake but had no opportunity of learning to whom it belonged. We believe that there has never been as much timber made on the Otonabee as there is this season, and that during next week more timber is likely to pass down than ever passed in one week before. We believe we are not overstating it when we say that five or six hundred cribs must pass the Bridge daily.

AMERICAN WAR.

The telegraph, last week, brought us news that Fredericksburg had been evacuated, and that a pontoon bridge was being thrown across the Rappahannock at Port Royal. If this be true, it would indicate that Grant is again changing his communications. His first line was from the Wilderness to the Rapidan. Lee having retreated to Spottsylvania, Grant moved to the east and got the railway and Fredericksburg in his rear. Lee having moved again, Grant chooses another line, more than fifteen miles to the south-east—diminishing the distance each time between his army and its base, though all the while getting nearer to Richmond. A few more miles will place him on the peninsula along which McClellan marched. If he intends to go there, the question arises, why did he not do so at first? This week we learn that the Federals claim that they have achieved a strategic triumph, in having been able to get within twelve miles of Richmond despite the efforts of General Lee. The rebels claim that Grant has been repulsed in every attempt he has made to defeat Lee; that they have compelled him to abandon his original plan of the campaign, add that the advantage in fighting near their base, more than compensates for the loss of a few miles of territory. There is some truth in both statements. Lee would have undoubtedly prevented Grant getting so near to Richmond if he could, and in the fact that he has not dared to attack the Federal forces, during some one of their long flank marches, made under his very nose, we have a sign of weakness. But that his present position gives him advantages for defence not previously possessed during the late battle is true. Had he been defeated at the Wilderness, Grant could have got into his rear, or have cut his retreating army off from Richmond, and beyond. In fact, the plan of "enclosing Richmond with a wall of fire" has failed. Grant has either got to attack Lee's army right in front, or to go back to the Rapidan the way he came. It is not true that he has lengthened his line of communication. He is as well off in that respect as ever he was. Sherman has won another victory in Georgia. We must still think the value of the operations there has yet to be decided by the fate of the Virginian campaign. Gen. Butler is locked up in his entrenchments at Bermuda Hundred. He has met with the fate to be expected of so arrant a boaster. To-day's telegrams brings news that another battle has been fought in which the Federals have managed to repulse the assailants.

A New feature in Photography.

We paid a visit to Mr. Evans's studio, lately erected by him on the hill opposite Sheridan Terrace. It is a beautiful little erection, and one in which we should imagine an artist would feel at home and happy.—We were informed it was built from drawings furnished to Mr. Evans by George Shadbolt, Esq., Editor of the British Journal of Photography from a design of Lieut.-Col. Stewart Worthy, who took the medal at the first photographic portraitist at the London exhibition of 1862. The design is thoroughly artistic, and is being largely copied by the leading English photographists. With the advantages which his new studio gives him, Mr. Evans will be able to compete successfully as a portraitist with any artist on the continent.—Pictorial Times.

Lakefield Amateur Concert.

The Amateurs of Lakefield held a Concert in the Village School-house on the evening of Tuesday, their object being to raise a fund for the purpose of liquidating a debt outstanding against the English Church.—Notwithstanding the disagreeable state of the weather, the room was well filled by an appreciative audience, who displayed an evident predisposition to pass an agreeable evening. When it was obvious that all did their best to make the performance attractive and when it is considered that the Concert was the first that has taken place in the village, it would be invidious to place one name in prominence before another, and it would savor of hypercritisism to indulge in praise of individual favourites to implied depreciation with regard to others. One observation we may be excused for hazarding, viz: that when an encore is demanded the second song should not be a mere repetition of the one that preceded it. The modesty of the performers, however, may be pleaded in extenuation of this faultr they were probably unanticipative of the compliment, and therefore unprepared to meet it.

Although we refrain from recording the names of the Lakefield Amateurs, we cannot but congratulate them on having secured the services of a gentleman from Peterboro' whose presence on such occasions is always hailed with pleasure by those who are acquainted with the good taste which never fails to accompany his pleasant voice—we allude to Mr. Bethune Higginson.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Monday, May 30th, 1864.

The Council met, present: His Worship the Mayor, and Messrs. Toole, Hamilton, Moffatt, Eastland, McNaughton, Leonard, and Landy.

The minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed.

A petition from Widow McMahon asking leave to move her shanty on one of the lots South of the Town was read by the Mayor.

Also, a circular from a Mr. Gregg in Toronto, who is about publishing a Municipal Guide, asking assistance from the Council.

Also, a communication from George Mc. Combe, stating that an error had been made in returning the non-resident Roll for 1861, on a part of his Lot.

The above were all referred to the Committee on Finance and Assessment.

Accounts amounting to $94.40½ were handed to the Finance Committee.

The following petitions asking the Council to make sidewalks and otherwise improve portion of certain streets in the Town, were read and referred to the committee on Streets and Bridges:—Thomas Douglas and others, James Stevenson, John Brown and others, James Hamilton, and Robert Stenson and others.

A report from the Committee on Streets and Bridges recommending certain improvements on the Streets petitioned for by several parties previously, was read, and after some discussion, it was received and adopted.

Moved by Mr. Hamilton and seconded by Mr. Toole,—That Mr. Eastland be added to the Street and Bridge Committee in place of Mr. Stevenson absent.—Carried.

The Council adjourned for one week.

Mr. Johnston's Lecture.—On Monday evening, the Rev. H. Johnston lectured to a large and highly respectable audience in the Victoria Hall. We have attended a considerable number of lectures in that building, and must say that this was the best attended we have seen. Mr. Johnston is a young man of very considerable promise, and handled his subject—"The True Man"—with great ability. His address was fluent, and his oratory good. Mr. Johnston has powers of no mean character, and as he gains experience in appearing before the public, will improve rapidly. Should he be spared for a few years and continue to train his own mental faculties, as he says every true man should train them, we have no doubt that his every appearance will be a success, and that he will have the rare merit of not only instructing but also of entertaining his hearers. A vein of good humour runs through all he says, that makes his projections all the more interesting.

New Park in front of the Court House.—This fine park is nearly finished, and must prove a great benefit to the inhabitants of the town. We understand the appropriation by the County Council is all expended. Indeed, the Warden who has been during his term of office most indefatigable in his endeavours to improve the county property round the Court House, has been expending something over the grant in order to get the work pushed; and, as without some further appropriation it will be impossible for the townspeople to enjoy the full benefit of the late improvements, it is hoped that the Town Council will display a spirit of liberality, and vote something to finish it. An additional grant of say $100 would smooth it all down, lay out walks, put up some seats and sow it with grass seed. A few more trees of an ornamental kind would be a great improvement.

FOUND DROWNED.

Some weeks ago, a man named Rice was missed by his friends, and enquiry made in all directions, but nothing could be learned as to what had become of him. A few days ago his body was found in the Little Lake, and a Coroner's jury returned a verdict of "Found Drowned." We learn that on the evening on which it is supposed he was drowned, that some parties living on the bank of the river below the Town, heard a man shouting along the vicinity of the water. The evening was dark and stormy, and there being a large number of men engaged on the river with the timber, little attention was paid to the shouts, supposing it was some of the raftsmen at work. There is little doubt that Rice had wandered off the road on his way home, and as it is supposed he was the worse of drink, he must have gone down to the river and been in danger when the shouts were heard.

FIRE AGAIN.

On Thursday evening last, a frame house on Smith Town hill, in this town, was discovered to be on fire. The evening was very dark, and the light from the conflagration lit up the whole town. Before the fire was discovered it was well under way, and though the firemen were promptly on the spot, the building was burned to the ground. It was the property of Mr. Bradburn, merchant, and we understand, was untenanted at the time. The origin of the fire is a mystery. The lightening was very vivid that evening, and it may have been set on fire by it. The building was worth about $600, and was insured for $300. To say the least, it is strange we have had so many mysterious fires lately.

Man Drowned at Port Hope.

On Tuesday morning a man was found drowned in the new harbor at Port Hope. He came off the grand Trunk cars the evening previous, and is thought to have gone down to the harbor to join some of the rafts, when he fell in. When found he was standing upright; probably in his fall he struck some of the timber with his head, which stunned him long enough to drown him in that strange position. His name is supposed to be Lynch.

Our readers will recollect an account of the loss by drowning of Francis Drake and a young lad named McGregor, both bodies have been found; the former at Robinson's Island, about three miles below where he fell in, and the latter near the steam sawmill of Messrs. Morton & Hales, nearly nine miles from the place where he was lost.

We beg to call attention to the Sabbath School Anniversary of the Bible Christian Church. Three sermons will be preached there on Sabbath, June 12th, and on the Tuesday following a Tea-meeting will be held in the Vestry, when addresses will be delivered by Messrs. Roberts, Colwell, and the ministers of the Town.

Fair Day.—The quarterly Fair takes place on Tuesday next. Farmers having cattle, horses, and wool to dispose of will please take notice.

Remember the Reform Meeting on Tuesday next (Fair Day). It takes place in the Committee Rooms over the Bank of Toronto at 1 p. m.

The Court of Quarter Sessions for the County of Peterborough takes places on Tuesday the 14th inst.

AMERICAN NEWS.

.....The N. Y. Commercial Advertiser says that Grant's army is very large, much larger than is generally supposed. Deducting all his losses he has still a larger army than that which fought at Antietam, Fredericksburg, or Chancellorsville, and this calculation does not include the force under General Butler.

Bad Stories about Treasury Clerks.—A special to Washington to the World says: "Washington is full of stories of startling developments, certain to be made before the Special Committee authorised to-day on the Treasury Department. Affidavits and witnesses are ready to testify that, in addition to gross frauds, a regular system of prostitution is carried on in the female bureau of the Treasury, with the connivance of its band of officials, and that a code of morals exists, degrading to woman as it is repugnant to decency, and calling for the brand of infamy on those at the bottom of it. Many of the female clerks have been secured as witnesses.

.....We are not likely to have any very definite news from Grants army just now, the following order having been sent to the proprietors of newspapers:—"New York, May 22.—To the editor of the—. Major-General John H. Dix instructs me to notify you of his desire that you will not publish at present any details which you may receive by mail or otherwise of the movement of General Grant's army, mentioned in the despatch of the Secretary of War, to General Dix of this date. (Signed.) E. S. Sandford, Military Supervisor.

Thirty Years Ago.—Do you remember what the world was like then, with its cumbrous stage coaches, its slow ships, and sluggish intelligence? How everything has changed since then. It was then that Dowse' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir first appeared before the public, and like the progress of the times, it has been steadily growing in popular favor. Have you never used it? Give it a trial, and satisfy yourself with what rapidity it will remove a cough, cure a hoarseness or sore throat. Physicians recommend it. John F. Henry & Co. Proprietors, 303 St. Paul St. Montreal C. E.

To Vocalists, Speakers, &c.—As your voice and lungs are much taxed, and often get out of order, by coughs, colds &c., try a box of Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers, only 25 cents a box, sold by all medicine dealers.

The Right of Search.—Probably no question is less understood between nations than the right of search. There is no general law laid down, and consequently they have to be governed by precedents which happened long ago; this is not the case with the "Canadian Pain Destroyer." Ancient history does not have to be traced to find out whom it has relieved from the tortuous pains of rheumatism, sudden colds, sore throat, burns, &c. Sold by all Medicine Dealers at 25 cts per bottle.

MR. DICKSON'S SPEECH.

During the debate on Mr. Brown's Constitutional resolutions, Mr. Dickson, the member for Huron and Bruce, made pungent and speech, from which we quote the following extract. Herald:

"The position before the House was one of very great importance, and entitled to the calm and dispassionate consideration of every hon. member. It recalled the words of a despatch addressed in 1859, by Hon. Messrs. Galt, Cartier and Rose, to the Colonial Minister, in which, with reference to the demand of the Upper Province for Representation according to Population, these gentlemen stated that 'the necessity of providing a remedy for a state of things that is yearly becoming worse, has impressed the advisers of Her Majesty's Representatives in Canada with the importance of seeking for such a mode of dealing with these difficulties as 'may forever remove them.' If then, the 300,000 of surplus population in Upper Canada had good reason to complain that they were not represented in this House, he held that the large and important constituency which he (Mr. Dickson) had the honor to represent, had especial reason to feel aggrieved at the treatment they were receiving, and he was sorry to say that no Government had yet had the manliness and fairness to undertake to do them justice."

The Counties he had the honor to represent embraced 1,700,000 acres, whilst Prince Edward's Island, which had a Governor and Legislature of its own, had only 1,355,000 acres. In these counties were the thirtieth of the whole population of both Upper and Lower Canada, or more than one fourteenth of the entire population of all Lower Canada. "Surely," said Mr. Dickson, "if Montreal, with its 90,000 of a population, is entitled to three members, the Counties of Huron and Bruce, with their 90,000 souls, are not asking too much if they demand another member for themselves."

Mr. Dickson proceeded to read some statistics, prepared by a gentleman who took a deep interest in that section of the country, shewing the progress made by the county of Bruce between 1849 and 1860. In 1849 it was a wilderness. In 1860, it had a population of 27,944 souls. The number of acres cleared was 89,500; the value of farming lands, $7,265,825; the value of village lands $500,000; stock, $624,485; farming implements, $130,125; value of mills, manufactories, &c., $580,000; value of the crop and other products of 1860, $1,030,690—the whole representing a solid addition to the wealth of the Province of $10,131,155. Besides this, the people of Bruce had paid to the Government for farming and village lots, $1,445,000, and contributed annually to the customs revenue of the Province something like $70,000. As an illustration of the injustice now done to this constituency, he might mention with regard to the members of the present Ministry, that the member for Kingston represented, according to the last census, 13,743 individuals; the member for Niagara, 14,470; the member for West Northumberland, 20,081; and the member for Hamilton 19,096. The four members of the Ministry from Upper Canada, therefore, who had seats in this House, represented an aggregate of 67,390 souls, while he (Mr. Dickson) represented, according to the last census, 79,493, a difference in his favour of 22,003—so that if numbers should have weight, the Upper Canada Ministers should all come and sit at the feet of the Gaspalliet representing Huron and Bruce. Then coming to Lower Canada, the Finance Minister, the member for Sherbrooke, represented 8,899 people, and the Solicitor General East, the member for Dorchester, 16,185. Adding these two Lower Canada Ministers to the Upper Canada section of the Ministry, the whole of them, represented an aggregate which still fell short of the population which he (Mr. Dickson) singly had the honor to represent. Nor was this the worst feature of the matter. How was it as to the debts they represented? The Solicitor General West represented Cobourg and a part of Northumberland, and in that capacity represented a Municipal Loan Fund debt, owing to the Province, of $1,000,000. Niagara, the constituency of the hon. Provincial Secretary, had borrowed from that fund $250,000, an amount which, by the non-payment of interest, has now increased to $430,000. Hamilton had not borrowed from that fund, but the Province had now been made guarantee for the debt of that city to a very large amount. The total debts of the members of the Ministry as now constituted, due to the Province, he found was $2,510,000. And the worst feature of the case was that the Ministers representing that debt, those of them, at all events from Upper Canada, were elected, not because they represented the wishes and views of the people of Upper Canada, but because of what it was believed they could do to relieve these defaulting municipalities of their obligations. It was unjust to Huron and Bruce that with so large a population they should only have one member, and that contributing so largely as they did to the revenue, they should have nothing returned to them for improvements. Hon. gentlemen opposite, when formerly they administered the Government, induced many people to go up and settle the county of Bruce, and to pay $2 an acre for their lands by promising, through an Order in Council, that one half dollar out of every two dollars would be returned for making roads and bridges in that county. But, after they got people to settle there on that promise, the Cartier-Macdonald Government deliberately withdrew from their engagement, and rescinded the Order in Council. Having got the people into the trap, they could not help themselves, and would not pay the money. He was prepared to prove that the county of Bruce and the new townships in Huron, were settled on that understanding. He said he would appeal to the fair-play of hon. gentlemen from Lower Canada, whether after promising these people to return one-fourth of the purchase money of their lands for improvements, it was right to withdraw the promise, and put the money into the Consolidated Revenue, and at the same time refuse them representation according to their numbers? It should be remembered, too, that his constituents had not the same advantages with regard to markets, as were enjoyed by the people of the Eastern Townships. The latter had first-rate markets in Quebec and Montreal, and could send their produce also to Portland, and would be able to send it to Halifax, as soon as they got the Intercolonial. But how was it with his constituents? Before he went home at the adjournment, he found some good seed-wheat, three miles out of Quebec, bought it, and gave instructions to have it sent by the Grand Trunk to Seaforth. And what did they think he was charged? Exactly 37½ cents a bushel. He would call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture, who had always been a strong advocate of the Intercolonial Railway, to this fact, and would ask him, if it cost 37½ cents a bushel to carry wheat from Quebec to Seaforth, how much would it cost to carry it from Seaforth to Halifax? At Quebec it would only have got about half way, and consequently the cost of conveyance, when the wheat was laid down in Halifax, would be 75 cents a bushel. In other words, the farmer living near Seaforth, would have to give his wheat for nothing, and pay 5 cents for the carriage."

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

A report is current that Mr. Chapais has objections against remaining in the ministry owing to their weakness. Another report states that the Government is afraid of the vote on the Stamp Tax, and will, therefore, abandon it. This last statement is probably correct. Referring to the division on Mr. Dorion's motion, the Montreal Telegraph says:—"Among those who voted with the Ministry was the celebrated or rather the notorious Colonel Rankin, who was hurriedly assisted to do so not of a members to the last party he allied himself with, only to betray. No one can blame Ministers for availing themselves of his services; but we are not called on to admire the traitor, after profiting by the treason."

The man by whom the deceased was accompanied at once set off in alarm to the constabulary, and on proceeding to the spot, Dwyer's brother was apprehended on suspicion, a recently discharged gun being found in the house. THE GIANT.

By John Maverty.

"Do tell me why the kettle's lid
Is moving up and down;
And why that cracked cream pulling out
So sharply from the basin's spout—
It sprinkles, see, your gown!"

"Ah! Charlie, boy, you do not know
That under that small lid
A giant, powerful and strong,
Who pushes slyly and winds along,
Is in the kettle hid."

"A real giant! Oh, nonsense!
You must be in a dream."
"No dream, my child; the slave of man,
He does mean work these heroes can;
The giant's name is Steam.

"Giants of old were mighty men,
Who mighty deeds could do;
So when one does the work of ten,
In digging mine or draining fen,
We call him giant too.

"And steam has strength for works so vast,
You can no giant name,
In all the books from first to last,
Which tell the story of the past,
That ever did the same.

"And you, my boy, will learn one day,
How that which moves the lid,
Can with the wondrous piston play,
And make the fly-wheel spin away,
And work as it is bid."

Varieties.

The following was posted in his house, a few days since, by a Poughkeepsie business man:

Headquarters, House of ——.

"General Order No. 1.—Tufts: Until the price falls, no more butter will be used in this family.

He had hardly reached his counting-house, when a special messenger handed him this:

"James: Until butter is re-instated no more tobacco will be used in this house.

Julia, Chief of Staff."

It is said that butter won.

'HERE THEY GO.'—Not long ago two smart looking fellows entered a well frequented public-house in the North Riding of Yorkshire, and calling for some refreshment, one of them says.

'I'll bet you £10 you cannot do it for one hour.'

'I tell you I can,' replies the other man. The landlord hearing this, asked what was the cause of dispute.

'Only this,' answered one of them, I offer to bet him £10 that he cannot look at that clock for one hour, and move his head similar to the movement of the pendulum, and say 'Here they go, there they go.'

'Done,' says the soft host, 'I can do it.'

The money was put down, and mine host commenced his task. In a short time one of the men took the £20 from the table and went out. Boniface noticed this, but, thinking it was a dodge to make him lose the money, went on, 'Here they go, there they go.'

Shortly after the other man went out, but still on went the host. The landlady made her appearance and asked her mate if he was mad. No answer but 'Here they go there they go. At last the hour expired, and he cried out, 'I've won!' But the silly man had lost £10. They had gone.

"My dear," said an affectionate wife, "what shall we have for dinner to-day?"

"One of your sexes," replied her husband; "I can dine on that every day."

"But I can't replied his wife.

"Then take this," and he gave her a kiss and went to his business.

He returned to dinner.

"This is an excellent steak," said he; "what did you pay for it?"

"Why what you gave me this morning, to be sure," replied his wife.

"The deuce you did" exclaimed he; "then you shall have the money the next time you go to market."

A driver of a stage, who was addicted to swearing, was rebuked by a passenger, who asked the wicked John to remember the example of Job, whose patience was so remarkable. "Job," said the wretch with a fearful start, "who did he drive for?"

TWO AGAINST TWO.—A gentleman of the name of Man, residing near a private madhouse met one of its poor inhabitants who had broken from his keeper. The maniac suddenly stopped and resting upon a large stick, exclaimed:

"Who are you, sir?"

The gentleman was rather alarmed, but thinking to divert his attention by a pun, replied.

"I am a double man; I am a Man by name and a man by nature."

"Are you so?" replied the other: "why, I am a man beside myself; so we two will fight you two!"

He then knocked down poor Man and ran away.

A YOUNG lady once remarked that there was one word in the Bible that she wished altered, and that was in the passage, "Whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek turn unto him the other also;" she would have the word "smite" changed to "kiss."

The newsboys make the most of the situation head-lines with which the telegraph dispatches are garnished. Seeing one little fellow unusually silent, a friend asks:—"What's the news, my man?" "O, there is let's of news, but nothing to holt p!" News with "nothing to holler" is a bad fix for the news-boy.

MR. Chase went to Philadelphia to have his teeth filled with gold. Why didn't he use greenbacks? asks the Boston Post. He says they are just as good as gold.

A BAD NIGHT.—A gentleman was once dining with a friend, when a most dreadful storm arose. In hopes of abatement, the entertainment was prolonged to the latest possible hour; but at length it was over, and the storm showed no signs of ceasing, but on the contrary, grew worse and worse.

The host insisted upon his guest's acceptance of a lodging for the night, in view of the impossibility of his reaching his home. The guest complied, but in a few minutes was missed from the parlor. In half an hour he re-appeared, drenched with rain.

"Where in heaven's name have you been?" asked the host, viewing the singular object, which looked like a dog around the ears and a weeping willow about the head.

"I?" said he quickly shaking off the water, "I have been at home to tell my wife that as it is such a bad night, I should not return."

A newly married gentleman and lady, riding in a chaise, were unfortunately overturned. A person coming to their assistance, observed it was a very shocking sight. "Very shocking, indeed," replied the gentleman, "to see a three-months' couple fall out so soon."

THE SELF-EMPTYING

WATER-DRAWER.

THE undersigned, while thanking the public in general for the liberal patronage they have bestowed on him, since his commencement in business, begs to state that he continues to manufacture his celebrated

PATENT WATER-DRAWER!

AT ELTHIE MILLS.

You must remember that by buying one of my Water-drawers, you get your water pure, which you cannot do by a suction Pump. I warrant them NOT TO FREEZE, and, to stand as long, if not longer, than any Pump; and, besides, you save over fifty per cent. I can sell them cheaper than any Pump-maker in Canada! If anything goes astray by fair play within one year from the time of purchase, I bind myself to re-place it; so you cannot be deceived. Now, any one who is in need of a Pump would do well to get one of my Water-drawers at once. I have two teams out at all times to deliver them, and persons residing at a distance will receive prompt attention by sending a letter to the undersigned

HENRY'S VERMONT LINIMENT.

READ THESE

CERTIFICATES.

Messrs. Henry & Co.,

Montreal, April 9th, 1860.

Gentlemen,—Your Vermont Liniment has cured me of a Rheumatism in my shoulder which had settled in the muscles, and for which nothing else would relieve me. I may well suppose I felt grateful.

N. H. DOWN'S VEGETABLE BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

A CERTIFICATE

WORTH A MILLION.

An Old Physician's Testimony.

READ!

Waterbury, Vt., Nov. 24th, 1859.

Although I do not like the practice of Physicians recommending indiscriminately, the patent medicines of the day; yet after a trial of ten years, I am free to admit that there is one medicine before the public that any Physician can use in his practice, and recommend to the people with perfect confidence; that medicine is Rev. N. H. Downs Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

I have used it myself with the very best success, and now, whenever I am troubled with a Cough or Cold, I invariably use it. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are suffering from a Cold or a Cough, for the Croup, Whooping Cough, and all diseases tending to consumption, and to the profession as a reliable article.

I am satisfied of its excellence beyond a doubt, having conversed personally with the Rev. N. H. Downs about it. He informed me of the principal ingredients of which the Elixir is composed, all of which are purely Vegetable and perfectly safe.

N. H. DOWN'S VEGETABLE BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

This old, tried, standard remedy still maintains its popularity When all others have proved inefficient, the Elixir alone continues to give satisfaction.—Use it for

COUGHS, COLDS, CATARRH, ASTHMA, CROUP,

Incipient Consumption and all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs.

Thirty years ago the Elixir first made its appearance; and ever since, in its primitive and improved state, produced such extraordinary results that it became, at once, a general favourite. Many have made it, what it really is, a Family Medicine.

For as more than half the diseases "to which flesh is heir," originate from colds, so this may be considered a general preventive of all diseases, by removing the primeval cause.

ADULTS

Should always keep this Family Physician at hand; and by its timely use save hundreds of DOLLARS that would otherwise be swallowed up in discharging doctor's fees.

Where are you going to-day?"
"Oh! I want to alter my last new dress,
And I'm going for Martha Hay."

What are you doing now?"
"Trimming my last sweet pops
With a feather across the brow."

"Oh! to the fancy store,
I've bought the stuff for a new Spring cape,
And I want a little more."

You are always busy I see;"
"Trimming my collar and sleeves with lace,
For I'm to be out to tea."

To gather the first June rose?"
"Oh! no, I go to the coloring shop
To dye some silken hose."

"A beautiful fancy shawl
To wear with the lovely China silk
I wore at the children's ball."

SUNDAY.

"I am glad to see you so thoughtful dear
On the holy Sabbath day."
"I was just considering which I should wear
The moire or the silver grey"
"And which will you wear, I pray, my love,
On the solemn judgment day?
Have you a dress prepared for that"
"Dear Father, what is it you say?"
"Go! fall on your knees to God, my child,
Ask him your soul to dress
In a robe more bright than angels wear,
Christ's robe of righteousness!
Ask him to take your trifling mind
And give you an earnest heart,
With Mary to sit at the Saviour's feet
And choose the better part."

AN ADROIT RASCAL.

Towards the end of autumn of the last year of the war in the Crimea, a stout, well-dressed, portly man, with an air of considerable assurance, swaggered into the chancellerie of Her Majesty's legation at Munich, notwithstanding the representations of the porter, who would, if he had dared, have denied him admittance, and asked in a voice of authority, if there were no letters there for Capt. F——. The gentleman to whom the question was addressed was an attache of the legation, and at that time was in charge of the mission, the minister being absent. Though young in years, F—— could scarcely, in the length and breadth of Europe, have fallen upon one with a more thorough insight into every phase and form of those mysteries by which the F—— category of men exist. Mr. L—— was an actual amateur in this way, and was no more the man to be angry with F—— for being a swindler than with Rastori for being Medea or Abbercady for being Macbeth. Not that he had the slightest suspicion at the time of F——'s quality, as he assured him that there were no letters for that name.

"How provoking," said the captain, as he bit his lip. "They will be important in England," muttered he to himself, "and I know Sidney Herbert is sure to blame me." Then he added aloud, "I see at a dead look here. I am come from the Crimea with dispatches, and expected to Redmooney here to carry me on to England; and these stupid people at the war office have forgotten all about it. Is it not enough to provoke a saint?"

"I don't know; I never was a saint," said the impassive attache.

"Well, it's trying to a sinner," said F—— with a slight laugh; for he was one of those happy-natured dogs who say not a different to the absurd side of over their own mishaps. "How long does the post take to England?"

"Three days?"

"And three back—that makes six; a week—an entire week.

"Omitting Sunday," said the grave attache, who really felt an interest in the other's dilemma.

"All I can say is, it was be fair of mine," said F——, after a moment. "If I am detained here through their negligence, they must make the best excuse they can. Have you got a cigar?" This was said with his eyes fixed on a roll of Cubas on the table.

"Take one," said the other.

"Thanks," said F——, as he selected three. "I'll drop in to-morrow, and hope to hear better luck."

"How much money do you want?" asked Mr. L——.

"Enough to carry me to London."

"Let me see. Strasbourg—Paris, a day at Paris. Cowley might detain at two days; fifteen or twenty pounds would do it amply."

"You shall have it."

"All right," said F——, who walked to the fire, and lighting his cigar, sauntered away; while the other took some notes from a table drawer and counted them

"Shall I give you a formal receipt of this?" asked F——.

"You can tell them at the office, said L., as he dipped his pen into the ink and continued the work he had been previously engaged in. F. said a few civil words—the off-hand gratitude of a man who was fully as much in the habit of bestowing as of receiving favors, and withdrew. L. scarcely noticed his departure; became deep in his dispatch, and wrote on. At length he came to the happy landing-place, that spot of rest for the weary foot. "I have the honor to be, my Lord," so he wrote and stood at the fire.

As L. finished his paper he reflected, and as he reflected he remembered; and, to refresh his memory, he took out some papers from a pigeon hole, and at last finding what he sought, sat down to read it. The document was a dispatch, dated a couple of years back, directing H. M.'s representative at the Court of Munich to demand the person of a certain M. F., and hold him in durance till application should be made to the Bavarian Government for his extradition and conveyance to England. There followed a very accurate description of the individual—his height, age, general look, voice and manner—every detail of which L. now saw clearly tallied with the appearance of his late visitor. He pondered for a while over the paper, and then looked at his watch. It was five o'clock. The first train to Augsburg was to start at six. There was little time, consequently, to take the steps necessary to arrest a person on suspicion; for he should first of all have to communicate with the Minister of Foreign Affairs, who should afterwards back his application to the Prefect of Police. The case was too far fetched, and for what the Germans insist upon, which writing—and there was very little time to do it in. L., however, was not to be easily defeated. If baffled in one road, he usually found out another. He therefore wrote a brief note to the minister, stating that he might require his assistance at a later hour in the evening, and at a time not usually official. This done, he dispatched another note to Captain F., saying familiarly it was scarcely worth while trying to catch the mail train that night, and that perhaps instead he would come over and take a tete-a-tete dinner with him at the legation.

F. was overjoyed on his read it. No man ever felt a higher pleasure in good company, nor knew better how to make it profitable. If he had been asked to choose he would infinitely rather have had the invitation to dine than the twenty pounds he had pocketed in the morning.

The cognate men of the world—and all members of the diplomatic career are to a certain extent in this category—were to F's. estimation the "trump cards" of the pack, with which he could score tricks innumerable, and so he accepted at once; and in a very few minutes after his acceptance, made his appearance in a correct dinner dress and a most unexceptionable white tie.

"Couldn't refuse that pleasant offer of L——, L——" (he was familiar at once, and called him L.) "and here I am to said he, as he threw himself into an easy chair with all the bland satisfaction of one who looked forward to a good dinner and a very enjoyable evening.

"I am happy to have secured you," said L., with a little laugh to himself at the epigram of his phrase. "Do you like caviar?"

"Delight in it!"

"I have just got some fresh from St. Petersburgh, and our cook here is rather successful in his caviar soup. We have a red trout from the Tegen Sea, a saddle of Tyrol mutton and a pheasant—vialà votre dinner!—but I can promise you a more liberal carte in drinkables; just say what you like in the way of wine?

F.'s face beamed over with ecstasy. It was one of the grand moments of his life; and if he could, hungry as he was, he would have prolonged it! To be there the guest of Her Majesty's mission; to know, to feel that the arms of England were over the door; that he was to be waited on by flunkies in the livery of legation, led by the cook who had ministered to official palates, his glass filled with wine from the cellar of him who represented royalty!—These were very glorious imaginings; and little wonder that F., whose whole life was a poem in this way, should feel that they almost overcame him. In fact, like the woman in the nursery song, he was ready to carry me on to England; and these stupid people at the war office have forgotten all about it. Is it not enough to provoke a saint?"

"I don't know; I never was a saint," said the impassive attache.

"Well, it's trying to a sinner," said F—— with a slight laugh; for he was one of those happy-natured dogs who say not a different to the absurd side of over their own mishaps. "How long does the post take to England?"

"Three days?"

"And three back—that makes six; a week—an entire week.

"Omitting Sunday," said the grave attache, who really felt an interest in the other's dilemma.

"All I can say is, it was be fair of mine," said F——, after a moment. "If I am detained here through their negligence, they must make the best excuse they can. Have you got a cigar?" This was said with his eyes fixed on a roll of Cubas on the table.

"Take one," said the other.

"Thanks," said F——, as he selected three. "I'll drop in to-morrow, and hope to hear better luck."

"How much money do you want?" asked Mr. L——.

"Enough to carry me to London."

"Let me see. Strasbourg—Paris, a day at Paris. Cowley might detain at two days; fifteen or twenty pounds would do it amply."

"You shall have it."

"All right," said F——, who walked to the fire, and lighting his cigar, sauntered away; while the other took some notes from a table drawer and counted them

"Shall I give you a formal receipt of this?" asked F——.

"You can tell them at the office, said L., as he dipped his pen into the ink and continued the work he had been previously engaged in. F. said a few civil words—the off-hand gratitude of a man who was fully as much in the habit of bestowing as of receiving favors, and withdrew. L. scarcely noticed his departure; became deep in his dispatch, and wrote on. At length he came to the happy landing-place, that spot of rest for the weary foot. "I have the honor to be, my Lord," so he wrote and stood at the fire.

The Late Naval Battle in the Adriatic.

THE ENGAGEMENT.

A WELL WRITTEN ACCOUNT.

It is very seldom we get from the American papers a really well-written account of a fight. They appear to have got up one or two original descriptions which they have stereotyped, and which, by a slight alteration of names and dates, does duty for all occasions. But the following from the Army and Navy Gazette is an exception, and will be found exceedingly interesting:—

HATTERAS INLET, N.C., May 16, 1864.

SIR,—I venture to submit the following account of one of the most unusual and remarkable naval conflicts of this or any other war, in which the contending forces were so markedly disproportionate, and the result so contrary to preconceived ideas of "iron-clad" invincibility, that it may justly claim to take an historical position on the same page that records the brilliant exploits of Decatur and John Paul Jones.

On the afternoon of May 5, the Massachusetts, Sassacus and Wyalusing, side-wheel gunboats were lying at anchor in Albemarle Sound, twenty miles below the mouth of the Roanoke River, having been assigned the arduous duty of encountering and, if possible destroying the rebel iron-clad ram Albemarle, whose recent raid, in conjunction with the attack and capture of Plymouth, whose she succeeded in capturing two of our gunboats and sustained unflinched the repeated broadsides of the Miami, directed by the bravest and lamented Flusser, rendered the prolonged occupation of the Sound at least a problem to be solved, and invested the expected contest with unusual importance.

THE RAM IS OUT!

An advanced guard of picket boats, comprising four or five of the smaller vessels of our force, with the Miami, had been sent forward to the mouth of the River, to discover the "ram" from under the protective batteries of Plymouth, into the open waters of the Sound, and fitting back before her with a favorable position for our attack. At 3.15 p.m. the Massachusetts signalled "to get under way," and forming in line ahead, the three vessels, in the order which their names have been written, proceeded with ordinary speed up the Sound, when at 4 p.m. the Massachusetts communicated with the army transport Massasoit, coming down, and immediately after made signal "Ram is out" and we now discovered our retreating pickets, as they slowly retired before the advancing foe. A moment later, and we discerned a glistening speck upon the water beyond our retiring vessels, with two other dark hulls hovering near, which we knew to be the ram accompanied by her consorts.

CLEARED FOR ACTION.

Our ship was cleared for action, and every preparation made for a determined and desperate struggle with our formidable antagonist; and now we were driving along under full steam, and closing rapidly with the enemy. The weather was perfectly charming; not a ripple disturbed the glassy sheet of water from shore to shore; and the declining sunshine gleamed upon the iniclosed plates of the iron-clad like masses of silver, as she lay defiantly heaving a magnificently large and gaudy ensign of the Confederacy. As we approached, the rebels were communicating hurriedly with their boats, and soon the white steam-whistle of the Albemarle was heard, and put back hastily towards Plymouth, being, as we afterwards learned, the Cotton Plant river steamer, which proved to be the Bombshell, captured from the enemy by the rebels at Plymouth and now used against us, closed up the ram's quarters, in position for the impending action.

THE FIRST BROADSIDE.

The whole vessel was impenetrable and beautiful. Our vessels, under a powerful head of steam, came steaming gracefully along, and as the Massachusetts approached nearer, she headed up for the ram, followed by the others in line, when the Albemarle, some distance astern, fired over my position a very good but useless shot, which was answered by the Albemarle whose gun, it was easy to see, were of the heaviest calibre. When abreast, and about three hundred yards distant from the ram, the Massachusetts delivered her broadside, and passing around her stern, ran by the Bombshell's bow aboard, as the latter lay on the port quarter of the ram. Our attention was now absorbed in the movements of her own vicinity, and in the same up, the ram having fallen target near the Massachusetts, as she swept by, turned her bow fairly for the Sassacus, but measuring the distance, managed our vessel; only a slight shock, with starboard helm, then ramming it hard a port, passing about one hundred and fifty yards from her, delivering with precision our whole broadside of solid shot, which bounded from her armour like rubber balls.

CAPTURE OF THE BOMBSHELL.

Sweeping around her stern, we now stood towards the Bombshell—which had escaped us exceedingly with small rifled shot, discomfited our pilot-houses, and which came flying in quick succession over our hurricane deck—and training on her opened into her hull a full broadside, which brought the rebel ensign down, and sent the white flag up when, ceasing our fire, we ranged close alongside, and hailed to know if they had surrendered, which was answered by shouts of "Yes," "Yes," "Yes," from a dozen throats. Ordering her to drop out of the way and anchor, which was executed in good faith, and pushing on to regain the time we had necessarily to stop engines, we noticed that the Massachusetts had again passed by the ram, skimming her fire, and the Wyalusing had come up astern of the Sassacus, threatening the apparition of the Albemarle from astern, in which she was repulsed by the Sassacus backing down her engines, and receiving the fire of the ram's stern gun, which was answered by the Wyalusing's gun, which was answered by the Wyalusing's gun, which was answered by the Wyalusing's

THURSDAY, JUNE 9 1864.

Mr. Dunkin's Temperance Bill.

In our last we gave a summary of the contents of the first thirty-seven clauses of the Bill, which mainly contain provisions for regulating local prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors.

The 38th clause enacts, that in prosecutions for the sale or barter in places where no such prohibitory law exists of intoxicating liquor without license, the justice, as soon as it may appear to him that the circumstances in evidence sufficiently establish the infraction of the law, may put the party complained of on his defence, and in default of his rebuttal of the evidence, may convict him accordingly; and the justice may summon any person represented to him as a material witness in the case; and if he does not attend or refuses to give evidence, may commit him to gaol till he consents to be sworn and to answer. This will make it much easier to prove the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor than heretofore. Since if a person be seen coming from a place the worse of drink, where drink is believed to be illegally sold, he may be put on oath and compelled to answer whether he got the liquor at the place complained of or not.

The 40th clause provides, that if any person becomes intoxicated through drink furnished to him by a tavern-keeper or his servants, and whilst in that state comes to his death by suicide, drowning, starvation or other accident, the party who supplied him with the liquor will be liable to action as for personal wrong; the action may be brought by the representatives of the deceased, and the verdict shall not be for less than $100, nor more than $1000.

It is also provided, that if any person, while in a state of intoxication, assaults any person or injures any property, whoever furnished him with the liquor which occasioned his intoxication, or any part of it—if such furnishing was in violation of the law—the party furnishing the liquor shall be liable to the person injured to the full amount of the damage, just as if he had been the party who committed the offence.

Section 42 provides that the husband, wife, parent, brother, sister, tutor, guardian or employer of any person who has the habit drinking to excess, may give notice in writing to any person licensed to sell intoxicating liquor of any kind, not to deliver intoxicating liquor to the person having such habit; and if within twelve months after the person so notified give intoxicating liquor to such a party contrary to his instructions, the person giving the notice may recover from the tavern-keeper a sum of not less than $20, nor more than $500, as may be assessed by the Court or jury as damages.

Section 43 provides, that any payment for liquor furnished in contravention of this Act shall be held to have been demanded without any consideration, and the amount or value thereof may be recovered from the receiver who made the same.

Section 44 forbids the sale of intoxicating liquor to any one whomsoever from the hour of seven on Saturday night till the hour of eight on Monday morning, under a penality of not less than $10 nor more than $50.

In Section 45 it is provided that any constable or police officer, when authorized in writing, may, at any time, enter into an inn or tavern, and any one refusing him admittance shall be liable to a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $50.

Such are the main provisions of an Act which we hope is destined to become law. As we said in our last, it is a great step in advance, and, if well worked, might do much good. As we anticipated, a great outcry is being made against it, by such papers as the Leader—the most shallow arguments being brought against it.

REPORTERS AND THE HOUSE.

During last week, the members of the press who do the reporting at the Legislative Assembly, have been at loggerheads with the members of the House. It seems that some of the members were dissatisfied that the reading room attached to the House was not more secluded, and managed to get an order passed forbidding all but members of the House access. The Reporters took umbrage a this conge, alleging—what was quite true—that they had no other opportunity of seeing the papers, and that without seeing them, they could not satisfactorily fulfil their duty as correspondents for their several newspapers—that the parliamentary reading room was the only one in Quebec, where the papers could all be seen—and that it was a privilege they had long enjoyed. The Reporters held a meeting, and agreed among themselves to report no more speeches till their ancient privilege had been accorded to them. And in pursuance of this view they at once framed a respectful note of enquiry to be addressed to the Speaker on the subject. For some days no reply was vouchsafed, and the Reporters all absented themselves. To many people this non-reporting will prove a blessing; the papers must be filled, and much more interesting matter will rule the place of the dry details of Parliamentary debate on the proxy squabbling of Country M. P. Pa. Since writing the above, we learn that the Reporters of the House have had to "eat their leek" Arms staying away for some days they went back, under protest. We agree with the Reader, that they ought to have shown better fight if there was any necessity feathering their teeth at all, they ought to have done so to better purpose.—We have no hesitation in saying as our belief that by the course they adopted from beginning to end, that the reporters have lowered very much the position of the press. If they were right in the course they took at first, they ought to have kept it till they compelled the M. P. P's. to submit; if they were foolish at first, the more the pity.

WORTHLESS CHEK.

A poor unfortunate wight was brought up before His Worship the Mayor, on Saturday last charged with having passed a check on the side-walk the evening before. On this Worship asking him on his oath he had to say to the charge, he began miserably whining, but did not speak; eventually Archibald admitted he had been going towards the Town hopping and pretending to be deaf and dumb. He certain a paper which stated that the bearer, Henry Dixon, was deaf and dumb, having been deprived of these faculties by a number of lightning in 1863. His Counsel informed His Worship that on putting him in the Lock-up last night, he had spoken to him, and he was merely feigning to be dumb. He was again asked to reply, but no, he still made signs and remained mute. His Worship told the Constable to get a rope and tie it round his neck and throw him in the street and drag him up and down till he recovered his speech. Dummy began to mutter a few sentences in a very low tone, soon he became quite voluble, and replied to every question put to him. He begged the Gaol's mate sit to send him to jail and promised if the Mayor would let him off he would clear out from the Town and never be seen in it again. The Constable conveyed him to Charlotte Street, and the way he put out of Town was a caution.

SAD ACCIDENT.

We have been informed that two men in the employ of Messrs. Fowlds Brothers, of Hastings, were killed last week. It will be remembered that the Burleigh Slide had been injured, and, in consequence, the running of timber over it had been stopped for some days. On this account an immense quantity of timber had been gathered just above, all in close proximity. Messrs. Fowld's men were running an elm crib thro' the slide, and had reached the bottom, when a pine crib which was following too closely came over the slide and fairly overlapped the hardwood one, on which were the unfortunate men. They were never seen more alive—very likely they were crushed to death by the overlapping timber. We have not heard of their bodies being found.

We have since learned that another man in the employ of the same gentlemen was washed off a crib of timber at the foot of the slide at Young's dam on Clear Lake and drowned. Both he and the other two unfortunate men who were lost at Burleigh, were from the Lower Province. We have not learned their names.

REFORM MEETING.

On Tuesday a large and influential meeting of the Reformers of the County was held in the Victoria Hall, Peterborough. Over three hundred persons were present, and the proceedings throughout were characterized by an amount of unanimity and enthusiasm rarely exhibited at political meetings. A number of excellent speeches were made by the movers and seconders of the various resolutions; and altogether the meeting was a most successful and harmonious one.—Want of space compells us to leave out an account of the business done; but in our next we will give a full account of the proceedings. Suffice it to say, that the object of the meeting was fully accomplished; and the Reformers of the County are now in a position—let an election come when it will—to return a member who will favorably represent their views.

VICTORIA HALL.

At the concert on Wednesday evening last this room was very full, and we have heard some gentlemen expressing great fear as to the consequences if a panic were to take place. The doors into the Hall open inwards, and if a rush were made toward them they might be difficult to get opened; and even when open, it would be almost impossible for three or four hundred people to get down the narrow stairs without accident. Would it not be well to have a good broad back stair, in case of accident. We have been requested to call the attention of the proprietors of this fine Hall to the matter. We feel certain that they will remedy this defect.

Public Temperance Meeting.

A public Temperance Meeting will be held in the Good Templars' Hall, over William-son's Store, George Street, on Friday evening next. The Rev. John Gilmour and Colonel Maultsin will address the Meeting. Several Recitations will be given by members of the Society, and good Music may be expected. Friends of the Temperance cause and the public generally are invited to attend. The object of the Meeting, and the ability of the speakers, should draw a large audience.—Admission free.

A Curiosity.—A large pair of deer's horns were drawn up from the bottom of Pigeon Lake, by one of Mr. Shaw's foremen, who had been anchoring a number of saw logs, they are the largest that have ever been seen in this neighborhood, and must have lain in the lake for some time, as one of the horns has been worm eaten; when drawn up the whole skeleton was attached, but on coming to the top of the water, it parted from the head. They are to be seen at Shaw & Wait's office.

Concert.—The Musical and Literary Union under the auspices of the Ladies Association of the First Presbyterian Church took place on Wednesday evening last. The Concert was a decided success. The Victoria Hall was crammed, and every one present seemed to enjoy the treat provided for them. Mr. Brown, who deserves all praise for the kind manner in which his services are always given for every good purpose, did excellent service with his choir. All the members of the choir and more especially the ladies acquitted themselves in the best manner. The gentlemen amateurs performed their part of the programme in a masterful manner. The singing of "A Little Farm well Tilled," was enthusiastically and deservedly applauded. But it was reserved for the Lady amateur who sang "Consider the Lillies," to bear away the palm. Whatever opinions may be held about the rest of the performances, and they are various, we have only heard one opinion as to this piece—it was deservedly the gem of the evening.

Fair Day.—On Tuesday we had our usual June Fair, a very large number of people were present, and considerable business was done. The Market was well attended, and we have heard of some sales of cattle at very fair prices. The day passed over very quietly; we were on the street two or three times in the afternoon, and are happy to be able to state we did not see a single person the worse of liquor.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Monday, June 6th, 1864.

The Council met, present, His Worship the Mayor, and Councillors Hall, Stanhope, Hamilton, Gifford, Sherbrook, Simpson, Upward, Landy, Hackett, Nelson, Chamberlain and Wilson.

The minutes of the meeting were read and confirmed.

The Mayor read a communication from W. S. Conger, Esq., M. P. P., addressed to himself, requesting him to read to the Council all the acknowledgement of the receipt of the Secretary of the Council to the Governor General, in reference to the Drill Shed and the Road in the Townships of Harvey and Galway; also, a reply from the Deputy Adjutant General of Militia to Mr. Conger, requesting him that the appropriation by the Legislature by an special that no assistance need be expected by the Town of Peterborough; also, a petition from Mr. Langton to the Clerk, requesting him to lay before the Council the copy of the Municipal Returns of Upper and Lower Canada, which he forwarded.

A petition from John O'Brian, asking the Council to reduce the price of his Tavern License, was read.

An account from Cox & Dickinson was referred to the Finance Committee; also, one from Henry & Charles New, for work done on the sidewalks, amounting to $15, was submitted.

Two petitions from A. W. Kempt and others, and R. White and others, asking the Council to repair Brock Street and Aylmer Street, were referred to the Street and Bridge Committee.

A report from the Finance Committee, recommending the payment of several accounts was read, received and adopted.

Moved by Mr. Hamilton and seconded by Mr. Landy,—That a part, say one-fourth of John O'Brian's license be refunded.—Lost.

On motion of Mr. Whyte, the Street and Bridge Committee was authorized to slope down the bank on the East side of Aylmer Street, between Murry and McDonnell Str'ts and deposit the stuff on said street or any other part they may think more convenient.

On motion of Mr. Toole, the Treasurer was instructed to pay to C. & H. New $15, that being the full amount of their account.

A deputation from the County Council, consisting of John Watson, Esq., Reeve of Smith, and T. F. Nicholl, Esq., Engineer, were heard in reference to the improvements on the Court House Park.

On motion of Mr. Lawson, one hundred dollars was granted towards the improvement on the Court House Park.

On motion of Mr. Toole, the petition of B. Reynolds and John Wilson be referred to a special committee, comprised of Messrs. Lawson, Hamilton and the mover.

The Council adjourned for four weeks.

SMITH COUNCIL.

Smith, May 30th, 1864.

Pursuant to adjournment, the Council met as a Court of Revision on the Assessment Roll, and after making some alterations in conformity with the request of several parties who have removed since the assessment was taken, the Roll was passed by the Court and ordered to be certified by the Clerk.

The members then went into Council, and the minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

John Lytle was appointed Poundkeeper instead of Mr. Finley, for Road Division No. 12.

The sum of $5 was directed to be paid to Wm. Chapman, to aid in defraying the funeral expenses of the late Widow Staple.

A statement of the receipts and disbursements of the Treasurer during the current year was presented, showing a balance of $797 due the Municipality, which was appropriated to the general improvement of the roads.

A By-law was passed apportioning the same amongst the several Wards as follows, viz: $150 50 each to the first, second, third and fourth Wards, and $195 50 the fifth Ward.

The Clerk was directed to advertise the passing of a By-law to close up and dispose of part of the original allowance for Road, between the second and third Concessions of Smith, also part of the original allowance for Road between Lots 18 and 19, in the second Concession of said Township, in conformity with the provisions of the Provincial Statute in that case made and provided.

The Council then adjourned till the 29th of August next.

Arche Cameron, Esq., President of the Bank of Toronto, died at his residence in Toronto, of gastric fever, on the 7th inst.

Personal.—We have to thank Billa Flint, Esq., for a paper read before the Literary and Historical Society of Quebec, 2nd March, 1864, by John Langevin, Esq., Auditor General, President of the Society. Subject—The Census of 1861.

A Warning to Bounty Jumpers.—We have just been informed by a friend who visited Rochester last week, that three Canadians were to be shot in that city on Friday for desertion. They had taken the bounty last fall and enlisted shortly after they deserted. This spring they went over again with the same object in view, but were caught and have now to expiate their fault with their lives.

Man Drowned.—We are sorry to have to notice the loss by drowning of William Fair, a native of this place, eldest son of Mr. George Fair. On Wednesday the 1st inst., Mr. Fair was crossing on some saw logs a little below Fenelon Falls, when unfortunately he slipped in and was never seen to rise again. Every exertion was made to recover the body, but owing to the great depth of water at the place (over 60 feet) the search has hitherto been unsuccessful.

Steamers to Ogdensburg via St. Lawrence.—We have been informed that it is not likely that a large steam fleet will visit Montreal or Quebec this season. The large number of accidents to steamers on this route has had the effect of making underwriters very chary of insuring by this route. A year or two ago insurance could be effected on goods for less than one-fourth that they can now; and scarcely any one will underwrite a vessel at all. It is said that the Messrs. Allan have had to run at least a large part of their fleet without any insurance. The "Anchor Line" on this very account is said to have left up and gone to New York. And other vessels that were intended for this route have been sent elsewhere. We would like to see some means taken to ascertain whether the accidents on this route ought to be ascribed to bad management or real natural difficulties.

CANADIAN NEWS.

....The Lindsay Post says that Mr. Jas. Wilkie, Chimney to Messrs. Smith, of the Mills, fell downward on Monday evening. He was picked over Peterboro Falls.

....The Montreal Witness says six of the best marksmen in the Volunteer Militia brigade in that city are to be selected to represent Montreal in the challenge match at the tournament in Toronto.

....Gold was quoted on Tuesday at the close of the Board in New York city, 1043. Greenbacks were bought and sold in this city at 47 to 48 per cent. discount.—Globe.

....The Cobourg World says that the body of Thomas Mills, who met his death at the late freshet, was found in that harbor on Thursday last.

....The largest vein of surface oil yet struck in Enniskillen, was struck a few days ago by gentlemen from London. Its yield per day by steam power is 100 bbls.

....A report has gained currency to the effect that a despatch had been received by the Government from the Colonial Office, advising, as a matter of prudence, the relocation of the Seat of Government in Quebec till the settlement of the American difficulty. This rumour has received a flat contradiction.

....The railway men at Quebec, who have determined to rule everything in the haughty and dictatorial manner which is customarily with them, are, we understand, so disgusted with the independent course of Mr. Dunkin, that they have threatened (according to a report current in Quebec) to kill his Temperance Bill in the Upper House, unless he withdraw his opposition to the Champlain Railway Amalgamation Bill. We trust he will keep clear of corrupt compromises. It was by such compromises that all the present difficulties have been brought upon the United States.—Witness.

The Money on Monday.—Beside the rebuff in the Upper House on Mr. Dickson's Bill, the Government suffered a defeat in connection with the Essex case. By a pro-committal motion, the Attorney General West managed to arouse very grave suspicions in Mr. Rankin's mind, and to provoke an adverse vote. It will be curious to watch the result of the falling out between Messrs. Rankin and John A. Macdonald. Two defeats in one day will do, even for a "strong" Government.

DEATHS BY DROWNING.

The navigation by timber rafts on the various Canadian Rivers appears to be very dangerous this season. The water has been extremely high on all the timber bearing streams throughout the country, and consequently much loss of life has resulted. We clip the following from the Ottawa papers:—

"In consequence, we suppose, of the high water, there has been more than the usual number of deaths by drowning among those engaged in lumbering operations on the Ottawa and its tributaries this season.

"The Pembroke Observer records the drowning of three men in the employ of Mr. Wm. Moffat on the river DuMoine, one of whom, a young man named Henry Durrell, belonged to Pembroke. It appears that on Thursday, the 19th ult., twelve men were in a boat and intended to land at the head of a chute or rapid. but approached too near and the boat was carried over. Nine then jumped out, six of whom saved themselves and were not carried over, the other three who had jumped out of the boat were swept over the rapids, but fortunately were caught at the foot just as they were about to be carried under a timber jam on which were Mr. Moffatt and some of his men. The remaining three who were in the boat, Henry Durrell, Tim. Lanagan, and a Frenchman, kept their places until the boat struck against a rock and went to pieces, and they were drowned.

"Alexander Gordon, son of Mr. Gordon who had the contract for the erection of the Renfrew County Buildings, was drowned at Portage du Fort on Monday last, while engaged with another person running a crib of timber over the rapids."—Ottawa Citizen.

"The Ottawa Union states that the water on the Madawaska was never known to be so high. It last week swept away the Burnstown and Balmer's Island bridges and Mr. Rochester's mill-dam. The saw-mill at Arnprior was carried away on the 22nd; only one end is left. One side of the government slide is gone. In fact, the water nearly covers the whole slide, and rolls over it in massive billows. The river is choked with timber from the boom at Arnprior to the Palmer rapids, a distance of 126 miles."

WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

The Annual Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Canada, commenced on Wednesday last the 1st of June, in the Elm street Church, Toronto. The body of that spacious Church being completely filled with Ministers. The Conference was opened by the Rev. Anson Green and the Rev. J. Carroll, of Peterborough. Afterwards the Rev. Mr. Green introduced the Rev. W. L. Thornton, M.A., President of the Conference and representative of the English Conference. Keyte, James Matheson, who shall reside at Warsaw; Bobcaygeon and Silver Lake, Thomas Williams, Wm. R. Barker; Minden, William Short; Fenelon Falls, William Sheridan; Havelock, David Hardie, Coboconk and Carden, Nathaniel S. Burwash.—One to be sent, who shall reside at Carden.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

Dear Sir,—You will confer a favor by permitting me to make a correction pertaining to the report given of the late Teacher's Association, which appeared in last week's Review.

I beg to take exception to that part of the Report where I am represented (with Messrs Dunbar and Creath) as "strongly urging the necessity of more careful examination, and the adoption of a different system as soon as possible." It will be remembered that I made no allusion to the "Board of Examination" or its mode of examining teachers; nor do I think either of the above gentlemen did; neither am I aware that the examinations are not at present carefully conducted. I believe that the gentlemen comprising the Board are eminently qualified for the duties assigned them.

My remarks with reference to the present system of Local Superintendents are correctly reported. I do think that beneficial results would flow from the establishment of a Superintendency for the entire County of Peterborough, whose only duty should be to attend to and keep the supervision and control of all the Schools in the County.

Yours, &c.,
WM. JAS. HUTTON.

Lakefield, 7th June, 1864.

Thoughts on the death of Mr. James Renfrew, late of the "Examiner."

Friendship! mysterious cement of the soul,
Sympathetic touch,
Expressive silence!

O, Thou! what charges with an energy more
Are still thy killings up of departed worth;
Thinking of a day we look thy counsel oftest,
Then contemplate public, and never unconcerned.

The lofty instinct of yon Hirdids and
Youth's flowery vales and sunny mountains trod,
Enchanting Hope her prospects spread around,
While on the deep in sky-formed circle bound,
Bright on the sun, that, setting cloudless, smiles
In glittering glory on the western isle;
But all is fled, like phantom of a dream,
Or midnight meteor's transitory gleam.

Could in that breast where Independence dwelt,
Where Reason ruled, & conquer'd Passion knelt,
Where love to mankind reigned without control,
And every public feeling of the soul
Is closed in death; could that dear heart-stay
The eye that beam'd with friendship's purest ray
Silent the tongue whence sprost instruction flowed,
Or harmless mirth, as duty marked the road.

No more where mists the twilight world hushed,
And the river's sound rise gently in the west,
We'll seek wood's, and on some spot reclined,
Where round the wild flowers wanton in the wind,
In converse sweet indulge, or raptured trace
The wondrous charms of Nature's fairy face,

SHOCKING OCCURRENCE.

ALLEGED MURDER AT HOGG'S HOLLOW.

On Wednesday evening the quiet of the little village of Hogg's Hollow, about six miles north of this city, was disturbed by a shocking affair, resulting in the almost instant death of an unfortunate man at the hands of another. The murder, if the story we have heard be true, is one of the most atrocious and cold-blooded affairs that has occurred in this vicinity for a length of time.

It is alleged that on Wednesday evening a number of men residing in and about the village of Hogg's Hollow, were assembled at a tavern in that place. They had been drinking for some time, and were no doubt, rather heated with liquor, when a discussion arose upon some religious question. A portion of the party was Protestant, and the other Roman Catholic. Words ran pretty high, and some slight scuffling took place, but nothing of a serious character occurred in the tavern. Through the interference of some peaceably disposed persons, the disturbance was quelled, and shortly after several of the disputants started for their homes. Amongst these were two men named Colville and O'Brien, the former a Protestant and the latter a Roman Catholic. Some pretty warm words were passed between these two men during the disturbance, but as everything seemed to be peaceably settled, no danger was apprehended in allowing them to leave the place together. After leaving the tavern, Colville shortly afterwards separated from the others, and proceeded towards his home. He had just reached the gate leading into a small garden in front of his house, when O'Brien came running up behind him and made an attempt to stop him as he passed through the gate. He succeeded, however, in getting into his garden without injury, and, no doubt, wished to avoid a struggle, as O'Brien was armed with a heavy stick, and from his manner seemed determined to use it in a desperate manner. On Colville passing into the garden the other followed him, threatening all the time to do him grievous bodily harm, and vowing to have revenge for some real or imaginary insult that he had received from Colville. Colville was within a few feet of his own door when his desperate opponent seized the heavy bludgeon that he carried and brought it down with all his force on the head of the unfortunate man, who staggered beneath the fearful blow, and then fell on the ground and expired in a few minutes, O'Brien attempted to escape, but was arrested by some persons who, having heard the noise just came up in time to secure him. He was placed in safe keeping, while the body of his unfortunate victim was borne into his recent happy home, and produced a heart-rending scene when stretched before his now widowed wife and fatherless little ones.

Dr. Phillbrick was shortly in attendance, but his services were of no avail, as the man was quite dead. The blow which caused death was inflicted on the base of the skull, in the region of the occipital protuberance, and death must have been almost instantaneous. The skull was very badly fractured.

An inquest was opened yesterday afternoon at Hogg's Hollow, by Coroner Reid, and a number of witnesses were examined. As there is still some important evidence to be taken, the enquiry was adjourned at a late hour last night.

Colville was a protestant and orangeman we understand, and he lived in the vicinity for several years, and worked as a teamster. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn his unhappy and melancholy death. O'Brien is a Roman Catholic, as we before observed, and has been employed as a labourer.

The jury at the inquest brought in a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against Michael O'Brien, and he has been committed to stand his trial at the next assizes.

An Affecting Scene.—Mr. and Mrs. Bowlsby, residents of the state of Michigan, who had two sons—Horace and Coradin—in the Seventh Michigan Regiment, came to this city a day or two ago to search for Horace, who they learned had been wounded in the battle at the Wilderness, and he had been brought to this city. Failing to find him in hospital, they yesterday evening visited the State street wharf. A few moments afterwards the steamer Jefferson steamed up to the dock, and standing near the bow of the boat was the looked-for son, badly wounded, his right arm having been shot off above the elbow. As soon as the plank was thrown from the boat to the wharf, Mrs. Bowlsby sprang on board the steamer, and throwing her arms around her son's neck burst into a flood of tears with her head bent upon his shoulder. For a few seconds there was an affecting, silence, which the fond mother broke by saying, "Horace, where is your brother Coradin?" Horace, pointing to a rough wooden box by his side, replied,—"Here, mother, there is Coradin!" The afflicted mother threw herself upon her darkened son's coffin, sobbing aloud in an agony of grief, while the father and wounded soldier by with bowed heads. The scene was truly a heart-rending one, and it can never be imagined than described. Many of the bystanders were compelled to turn aside, while silent tears could be seen stealing down the cheeks of all. Several kind hearted ladies present did all in their power to comfort the afflicted mother, but it was long before she could be induced to leave the side of her deceased son.—Washington Star.

Fire in Norwood.—A severe fire occured in Norwood on the night of Monday, 30th ult. About two o'clock in the morning, flames were seen issuing from the waggon shop of Mr. Thomas Howson, which speedily communicated to his dwelling house on one side, and to the store of Messrs. Charles and William Stephenson on the other. These buildings and their contents are totally consumed. Mr. Howson and family barely escaped with scanty clothing; and his fine up shop of two-storied, with all his materials and tools were burned.—Hastings Messenger

Friendship! mysterious cement of the soul,
Sympathetic touch,
Expressive silence!

O, Thou! what charges with an energy more
As still thy killings up of departed worth;
Thinking of a day we look thy counsel oftest,
Then contemplate public, and never unconcerned.

The lofty instinct of yon Hirdids and
Youth's flowery vales and sunny mountains trod,
Enchanting Hope her prospects spread around,
While on the deep in sky-formed circle bound,
Bright on the sun, that, setting cloudless, smiles
In glittering glory on the western isle;
But all is fled, like phantom of a dream,
Or midnight meteor's transitory gleam.

Could in that breast where Independence dwelt,
Where Reason ruled, & conquer'd Passion knelt,
Where love to mankind reigned without control,
And every public feeling of the soul
Is closed in death; could that dear heart-stay
The eye that beam'd with friendship's purest ray
Silent the tongue whence sprost instruction flowed,
Or harmless mirth, as duty marked the road.

No more where mists the twilight world hushed,
And the river's sound rise gently in the west,
We'll seek wood's, and on some spot reclined,
Where round the wild flowers wanton in the wind,
In converse sweet indulge, or raptured trace
The wondrous charms of Nature's fairy face,
Or bid, before the intellectual eye,
The men and things of other days pass by.

Whether or where we meet again, is known
To the Great Power Omnipotent alone;
But, friend departed,—among friends the best—
Surely thou dwellest in the land of rest.

County of Peterborough Teachers' Association.

The above Association held its quarterly meeting on [illegible] the Normal School Building.

There were [illegible] present. The President [illegible] the chair. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

The President, John King, Esq., Principal of the Grammar and Union School, made a very appropriate and telling speech, showing that teachers generally were very poorly remunerated for the arduous labours they had to perform, the expenses of which was that the Trustees had not paid a due regard to the interests of the profession, as soon as any other pretended guide. He further remarked, that as long as Trustees were guided by low wages, they might expect poor Teachers, as no one of high qualifications could live on it [illegible] him that scarcely enabled him to provide even the necessaries of life. This state of things, he attributed to the low standard of qualification set up by the Board of examiners, and thought it could not be remedied while the Board continued to grant certificates to persons absent, if not altogether unqualified to teach.

Mr. Stratton followed with a few remarks, in which he referred to the fact, that persons obtaining certificates in this County had failed to get one of an equal grade in another County; and there were instances of parties from this County, failing entirely in a neighboring County. This, he thought, spoke strongly in reference to these things. He remarked that at various times candidates for examination had furnished him (of course from memory) with the questions in Grammar, Arithmetic and Algebra, and he had no hesitation in pronouncing them but poorly adapted to the end intended; indeed, thought they would not be postponed to a child of ten years, in even a third class school.

Messrs. Dunter, Smith and Crook spoke in almost the same strain, strongly urging the necessity for more careful examination, and the adoption of a different system as soon as possible.

Mr. Smyth, Lakefield, thought the first and best remedy for existing evils, would be to abolish the present system of Local Superintendents, and appoint a County Superintendent instead thereof; and recommended that the County Council be petitioned to take the matter into consideration and appoint a County Superintendent, but thought that none except a practical teacher, who has at least a first class certificate, should be appointed.

The opinion of all present was solicited, when it was found to be the unanimous desire of all to have the present system of Superintendency abolished, as it did not answer the end intended, nor meet the expectations of Teachers; and they all thought that to meet the growing demands of education, a County Superintendent was imperatively required.

In accordance, therefore, with these generally expressed wishes, a Committee, consisting of the President, Messrs. Stratton, Healey and Smith, was appointed to draft a petition to be presented to the County Council, praying that body to abolish the present system of Local Superintendents, and appoint a County Superintendent instead; and that the Committee report at next meeting of the Association. The above was carried without dissent.

The association will meet again the last Saturday of August next.—Com.

ARRIVAL OF THE "CHINA."

THE LONDON CONFERENCE.

SMALL CHANCE OF AGREEMENT.

BREADSTUFFS DULL.

Halifax, June 6.

The steamship China, from Liverpool on the 28th ult., via Queenstown on the 29th ult., arrived last evening.

The Conference re-assembled on the 28th ult., but the chances of an agreement are small. Many propositions for an amicable arrangement are being offered.

Breadstuffs dull. Provisions dull.

London, May 28.—The Times has an article endeavouring to show that even if Grant successfully captures Richmond, the rebel cause is not lost, and its downfall will be at the expense of a great loss of life to the Federals.

The Conference re-assembled yesterday, but nothing important transpired.

At the Conference all the members were present.

A despatch sent out by the steamship Damascus and duplicated per the China, notes the reduction of the rate of discount by the Bank of England from eight to seven per cent.

The London Times' correspondent at Richmond, under date of April 21, claims that the rebels had full information of Grant's plans for his campaign. In a despatch a fortnight before Grant marched, the operations of his army were received are delineated with extraordinary precision.

The Morning Post says the representatives will announce officially the opinions of their Governments on the proposed arrangements for the subdivision of Schleswig, the northern portion being amalgamated with Denmark and the southern with Holstein. The Post thinks there is great probability of Denmark or Germany assenting to the proposition. Austria and Prussia were said to be in complete accord, and it was asserted in one of their organs that they contemplated offering resolutions for the complete separation of the duchies from Denmark.

Accounts from Jutland assert very arbitrary proceedings by the Prussians since the conclusion of the armistice.

Berlin papers deny any violation of the armistice by the allies having taken place.

The Patrie states that the Council of Ministers at Copenhagen have resolved not to consent to a division of Schleswig, and have dropped the Danish Plenipotentiaries, rather than consent to it, to quit the Conference.

The German papers say that Prussia and Austria intend exerting their utmost influence in favor of Augustenburg.

Continental papers assert that the basis of the arrangement to be adopted consists of a union of Holstein and six southern communities of Schleswig to Germany, and the incorporation of the rest of Schleswig permanently with Denmark.

The London Times fears that the belligerents will not consent to a peaceful division on reasonable principles of the territory claimed by both. The Germans believe they may do what they please without the fear of exciting more than England's indignation. Denmark, on the other hand, is in no hurry to end the war, having little more to lose, and hoping much from the chapter of accidents.

THE WAR IN THE STATES.

From the Globe.

From the different accounts which have arrived, we propose to give a synopsis of the proceedings in Virginia last week. The task is a very difficult one, because the operations of each division of Grant's army are frequently mentioned without reference to the movements of the rest. Moreover, the reports are as usual very contradictory. In the majority of cases, it is absolutely impossible to tell which party began the attack, or which party was repulsed.

We think we are correct in the conclusion that on Monday, the 30th ult., Gen. Grant's army occupied a position ranging from the south-east to the north-west. His right was about eleven miles directly north of Richmond, near Atley's Station, while his left rested near the junction of the Totopotomoy creek with the Pamun

Poetry.

LAW VERSUS SAW.

Sitting in his office was a lawyer—
Standing in the street a sawyer;
On the lawyer's sallow face
You could read a miserly case,
Reading law;
While the sawyer, gaunt and grim,
On a rough and knotty limb
Rose his saw.

Now the saw-horse seemed to me
Like a double X in law;
While the saw,
Whichever way 'twas thrust,
Must be followed by the "dust,"
Like the Law.

And the leg upon the rack,
Like the client on the rack,
Playeth its part—
As the tempered teeth of steel
Make a wound that would not heal,
Through the heart.

And each severed stick that fell,
In its fall seemed to tell,
All too plain,
Of the many severed ties
This in law suits will arise,
Bringing pain.

Then we thought the sturdy paw
That was using saw and saw
On the wood—
Held a yielding mine of wealth,
With his honest toil and health—
Doing good.

If the chips that strewed the ground,
All by honest striken wedge found,
In her need,
Should by light and warmth impart
Blessing to her aged heart,
Happy deed?

This conclusion then I draw,
That no exercise of law,
Twisting India Rubber Law,
Is as good
As the exercise of saw,
Or the handle of the saw,
Sawing wood.

SOLOMON advised the sluggard to go to the ant. In our day, the sluggard has often to go to his uncle.

HOW heroic is whisky. Young men ordinarily diffident and decent, suddenly become brazen — shameless — ruffianly. — Drink boys, it is so genteel!

WHY is a vain young lady like a confirmed drunkard? Because neither of them are satisfied with the moderate use of the glass.

Why is a lawyer like a man who cannot sleep?—Because he lies first on one side then on the other, and is wide awake the whole time.

MRS. Partington wants to know if it were not intended that women should drive their husbands, why are they put through the bridal ceremony?

"GEORGE, my boy, do you know that Mr. Jones has found a beautiful baby on his doorstep, and is going to adopt him?" "Yes, papa, he will be Mr. Jones" stepson, won't he?"

A PICKPOCKET, who had been ducked for his malpractice, accounted to his brethren for the derangement in his appearance by coolly observing that he had not been able to change his dress since his return from "a educated watering-place."

"I wonder how they make lucifer matches?" said a young married lady to her husband, with whom she was always quarrelling. "The process is very simple" said the husband, "I once made one."—"How did you manage it?" "By leading you to the altar."

"How old are you?" said a magistrate to a German, who was arraigned before him. "I am dirty." 'And how old is your wife?" "My wife is dirty-two." "Then, sir, you are a dirty couple, and I wish to have nothing further to do with either of you."

"HERE you little rascal, walk up here and give an account of yourself—where have you been?"

"After the girls, father."

"Did you ever know me to do so when I was a boy?"

"No, sir; but mother did."

"My son, you had better go to bed."

A man having accidentally broke a pane of glass in a window, was making the best of his way out of sight; but the proprietor stole a march upon him, and having seized him by the collar exclaimed, "You broke my window, fellow did you not?"—"To be sure I did," said Pat; "and didn't you see me running home for the money to pay for it?"

TIRING OUT.—A restless genius who went to a Quaker meeting, and after bearing the decorous gravity as patiently as he could for an hour or two, at last he declared he could not stand it any longer; "Why," said he, "it's enough to tire the very d——out." "Yes, friend," responded an elderly gentleman of the congregation, "does thee know that is exactly what we want to do?"

A lady in Chicago the other day was asked by her cousin how she liked Bahmoral stockings. "Oh, very well," was the reply. "Well, I don't mind the cousin, "nor will I wear them either: I'll be hanged if I'll make a barber's pole of my leg for the sake of being fashionable!

At a school established for poor children in an English town, the clergyman who was teaching was asking among other things.—"Why were Adam and Eve turned out of Paradise?" He jumped a boy, and with an eager countenance answered, "Because they could not pay their rent." On inquiry, it proved that his father and mother had been remorselessly turned out for the same cause, and that the like catastrophe was then impending afresh. Pity was awakened, the case was investigated, and relief was afforded.

A Yorkshireman, on a railway platform had Macaulay pointed out to his notice; and upon it being explained to him that the Baron was an author, who was formerly known as Mr. Macaulay, he thus put him to his astonishment: "That's Measter Macaulay, the owtther, is it now? Well, I swan thought they looked pale and seedy and out at the elbows: but that chap's got a hat, an he's so weel dressed too—dang it, I should never taken him for an owthor."

An Irishman was requested by a lady, neighbour to her to remove some ugly insect to do some handiwork for her. The job was performed to her complete satisfaction. Pay, said the kind lady, I must treat you. God bless your honor, ma'am, replied Pat. Which would you prefer, a glass of porter or a tumbler of punch? I don't wish to be troublesome, ma'am said the Hibernian, turning round and working at the disagreeable bother, but I'll take one while you're making the other.

PATENT WATER-DRAWER!

AT BLYTHE MILLS.

I warrant them not to freeze, and to stand as long, if not longer, than any Pump; and, besides, you save over fifty per cent. I can sell them cheaper than any Pump-maker in Canada! If anything goes astray by fair play within one year from the time of purchase, I bind myself to replace it; so you cannot be deceived. Now, any one who is in need of a Pump would do well to get one of my Water-drawers at once. I have two teams out at all times to deliver them, and persons residing at a distance will receive prompt attention by sending a letter to the undersigned

VERMONT LINIMENT.

READ THESE CERTIFICATES.

MONTREAL, Apr. 9th, 1860.

DEAR SIR,—Your Vermont Liniment has cured me of a rheumatism which had settled in my limbs, and for which I had tried all the remedies I could hear of, without success. I will recommend it to all my friends.

T. QUINNEY.

South Granby, C. W.

Mr. Henry R. Gray, Chemist, Montreal.

SIR,—I am most happy to state that my wife has been cured of a most severe attack of rheumatism, having gradually got a swelling over the whole body. The pain was most intense; but by using the Liniment, the pain was soon gone, and she is now in a fine state of health.

Yours very respectfully,
W. GIBSON.

Montreal, Dec. 12th, 1860.

Messrs. Henry & Co.

Having on various occasions used your Liniment, I am happy to say that I have always found it beneficial. I have frequently used it for bowel complaints, and I have never known it to fail in effecting a cure. I think it the best medicine I ever used for Diarrhœa and Dysentery, and it does more rapid its operation, and more effectual than any other medicine.

H. HALSTEAD.

N. H. DOWN'S VEGETABLE BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

A CERTIFICATE WORTH A MILLION.

An Old Physician's Testimony.

HEAD:

Waterbury, Vt., Nov. 24th, 1858.

Although I do not like the practice of Physicians recommending, indiscriminately, the patent medicines of the day; yet after a trial of ten years, I am free to admit that there is one medicine before the public that any Physician can use in his practice, and recommend to the public with perfect confidence; that medicine is Rev. N. H. Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

I have used it myself with the very best success, and now, whenever I am troubled with a Cough or Cold, I invariably use it. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are suffering from a Cold or a Cough, for the Croup, Whooping Cough, and all diseases tending to consumption, and to the Profession as a reliable article.

I am satisfied of its excellence beyond a doubt, having conversed personally with the Rev. N. H. Downs about it. He informed me of the principal ingredients of which the Elixir is composed, all of which are purely Vegetable and perfectly safe.

J. B. WOODWARD, M.D.

Now Brigade Surgeon U. S. Army.

This popular medicine is no longer an experiment. Thousands of people who have used it, bear witness to its superior excellence in the cure of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, Influenza, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Pain in the Side, Back or Chest, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Tooth-ache, Headache, Lame Back, Pains in the Limbs, Sprains & Swellings of the Joints, Sore Throat, Sore Mouth, Quinsy, Croup, Bronchitis, Coughs and Colds, Chronic Affections of the Liver, Bowel Complaints, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Cholera, Cholera Morbus, Wind Cholic, &c., &c.

Much might be said of its remedial properties and magical effects, but the limited space of this Advertisement will only admit of a general summary.

It is prepared with care: great pains being taken to effect an exact proportion of each of its ingredients, in such a manner that the combination shall produce more rapid in its operation, and more effectual than any other known medicine.

J. B. WOODWARD, M.D.

This old, tried, and celebrated, standard remedy still maintains its popularity. When all others have proved inefficient, the Elixir gives complete satisfaction.—Use it for

COUGHS, COLDS, CATARRH, ASTHMA, CROUP,

Incipient Consumption and all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs.

Thirty years ago the Elixir first made its appearance in and even then, in its principle and imperfect state, produced such extraordinary results that it became, at once a general favourite. Many have made it, what is really it, a Family Medicine.

For as more than half the diseases to which flesh is heir, originate from colds, as this may be considered a general preventive of all diseases, by removing the primeval cause.

ADVICE

Should always keep this Family Physician at hand; and by its timely use save hundreds of dollars that would otherwise be swallowed up in discharging doctor's fees.

LITTLE JESSIE.

We miss her pretty childish talk,
Her footsteps on the stair;
We miss her all our daily walk,
We miss her everywhere!

We cannot choose but weep at this!
We blow upon the coal;
This fulness of our flesh, we know,
Has gone to meet her God.

We dare not wish her back again,
Our little angel child!
Though in our hearts a dull, sad pain
Beats with throbbing wild.

But nature will assert her sway,
The unbidden tears will flow,
As we think on every winning way
Of our darling—long ago.

When she came to bless our pretty home,
First little nestling there;
Ah! blame us not if the tears will come
For we miss her everywhere!

Literature.

AN ECCENTRIC SAILOR.

Some two or three miles from the little town of Aylesbury, England, there once lived three cousins, of the family name of Barrett. They were all married and settled on farms, within a mile of each other, and had children growing up around them. They were not rich, but in comfortable circumstances, and each had expectations. An eccentric uncle had gone out to India when a young man, and rumour told that he had become very wealthy, and would probably die a bachelor. Who, then would inherit his property? they being at the time the nearest of kin.

One day these three families were thrown into great commotion by each of them receiving a letter, which contained, besides date and signature, only these words:—

"I am rich; fools here call me a cobweb, I wouldn't give such a title to a nut. No matter, I shan't live always—and when I die, my property must go to somebody. I shall come and see you, and hope you will please me. I hope you are not troubled with beggars. I do not like to see them about."

One dark, rainy night, about three weeks after the reception of these letters by the cousins, the house of Moses Barrett was thrown into a state of the wildest excitement by the appearance at the door of two mounted men in livery, who announced themselves as the errand couriers of his excellency Joshua Barrett, of India, who would claim their hospitality for the night; saying which the messengers put spurs to their horses and dashed away, without giving the astonished listeners time to ask a single question.

Now, Moses Barrett was a hunks, his wife a shrew, and his three children chips of the two blocks, but, all undertook to change their natures for a time—or, rather, to be ready to change them on the appearance of the rich uncle; for what was the use of acting with the curtain down?

"Now, Mose, you stingy old brute," said his wife, "if you know on which side your bread's buttered, it's to be hoped you'll have some chickens killed for his excellency's supper, which was more'n you'd do for Christmas; and some of that wine fetched up that you've had in the cellar ages the year one; and a fire made in the best room, that hasn't been there these ten years; and all your nice clothes put on. That ain't much, for you'd never allow us nothin' decent."

"And it's to be hoped, old woman," retorted the husband, "that you'll soften down that screeching voice of yours, and twist your wrinkles into smiles; and that'll be something I've never seen done since the first week of our marriage!"

Great activity was displayed by all the parties concerned in getting ready to give the rich uncle the best reception possible; and all rejoiced as much as such a hopeful family could rejoice, that they would be the first to receive a visit from him—hoping, of course, that they might thus forestall the other relations of his good graces. It would have been a strange way for any one else to pay a first visit; but then they knew the uncle was very eccentric, and his being so very wealthy made it all right in their eyes. He might come and stand on his head, provided he paid for his antics.

In the midst of their hurried preparations there appeared at the door an old, feeble-looking, white-haired man, thinly-clad, with his soaked garments clinging to his shrivelled form.

"Will you be kind enough, good folks," he said, "to give me something to eat and a place to sleep to-night?"

"We've got nothin' to spare, and if we had we wouldn't harbor beggars!" replied the master of the house, in a coarse, brutal tone.

"But I'm old and feeble and hungry and wet and tired," said the aged applicant, in a pleading tone, "and if you drive me away I may perish."

"Well, that's what you ought to have done long ago!" put in the cross old dame. "When people get too lazy to work for an honest living, and start out a begging, it's my opinion they are better dead than alive! Besides, we expect somebody good—a rich gentleman from India—and haint got no room for the likes of you."

"Well, then," returned the old man, with a heroworful moan, "since you cannot keep me over night, please give me something to eat and I'll go further."

The dame caught up a piece of brown bread with no saggy brown, and was about to hand it to the mendicant—more for the purpose, as it seemed, of getting rid of him, than from any feeling of compassion—but her miserly husband interposed, and said sharply—

"I told you we hadn't nothing for you; and so travel on."

"I'll be the last to see you if you don't, you old beggar!" cried a lad of six, "My rich uncle's coming here to night, and he can't bear beggars, so you'd better be off while your head's a whole."

"May Heaven be more merciful than you!" sighed the old man, as he turned and disappeared in the darkness and storm.

Some half an hour later he knocked at the door of Stephen Barrett, another of the cousins, and asked for food and lodging.

"It isn't convenient for us to keep you to-night, said the master of the house in a mild dignified tone. "Besides, we don't like to encourage beggars. If you are not able to work, the parish where you belong is bound to support you. No one need starve in this country, which the Lord, praise be to his name, has so bountifully blessed. I trust I am not wanting in charity—as a humble follower of the Lord Jesus Christ I hope I am not—but what with the taxes for the support of the government, and the poor, and donations to the benevolent societies and the heathen missions, it is as much as I can do to live and give my family a respectable maintenance. No, my friend, if you are poor and not able to work, you had better throw yourself on the parish where you belong."

"But I am tired, wet, and hungry," said the old man, "and all the parishes in the world can't do me any good to-night."

"But you should have thought of that before you left home," now chimed in the good housewife, "with a sanctified air. "It is sinful to tempt Providence, and whoever sins must expect punishment. I never go from home without providing for my journey, and of course I don't expect people to shelter me for nothing. It is a sin, too, to be idle when one is able to work, and it is against my principles as a Christian to encourage any one in sinning."

"Then I suppose I'm to understand that you refuse me both food and lodging?" said the old man.

"Why, as to food," said the pious dame, glancing at her husband, "if you're very hungry, I suppose we can do something for you in that way, but lodging is out of the question—for two mounted couriers have been here, to say that a very rich uncle of ours from India will be here very soon, and he can't bear beggars. Put your trust in the Lord (continued the woman), as I do, that's what we always do when in trouble, Sarah Jane, go down cellar and bring up a couple of cold potatoes for this old man."

"By-the-by," she continued, "I do believe you can get a good night's lodging at Henry Barrett's who lives only half a mile from here, on the road on the right—a great friend for taking in strangers."

She looked at her husband, and both smiled knowingly, for both were thinking that, in case the rich uncle should find the beggar there, it might increase Stephen Barrett's chances of being the fortunate heir.

Sarah Jane now returned and handed the old man two little cold potatoes. He took them, turned them slowly over, examined them on all sides, and muttered:—

"They have eyes; but can they see? I think not; for if they could they would blush and, instead of keeping such a dark color." Then glancing slowly around the neat, tidy, cheerful room, taking in three prim girls and a stern pair of parents, he quietly tossed the potatoes into the lap of the astonished mistress, saying as he did so.

"I beg your pardon madam—but I didn't intend to rob you."

"Oh, you awful, wicked old creature!" exclaimed the dame in holy horror, as the disgusted mendicant turned and went out, shutting the door with a slam.

In less than half an hour the unfortunate wayfarer was trying his chances at the door of Henry Barrett.

"Come in!" said a strong, hearty cheerful voice, in answer to his timid knock.

He entered a large, plainly furnished apartment and beheld a group of six persons—father, mother, two sons and two daughters—seated round a pleasant fire, and all looking contented and happy. On seeing his visitor was an old man and a stranger, the master of the house arose and invited him to walk forward and take a seat, and all the others drew back respectfully, to enlarge the circle and give the best place at the fire.

"I have called," said the old man, stopping and removing the cap from his white head, "to ask if you will be kind enough to give me some food and lodging for the night."

"Of course we will my friend, and glad of the chance to serve a fellow-being in need," said Henry Barret in a frank cordial tone.

"Sit down and dry your wet garments, and make yourself at home! Come girls, bestir up something warm for the old gentleman, who is wet, tired, and chilled through. You might not to have been out so late in this storm, father."

"No, I know, returned the other, holding his hands to the fire; but the persons I applied to would not take me in."

"What," refuse lodging to an old man like you on such a night as this christian community!" exclaimed the indignant host. "Who were the inhospitable wretches?"

The old man had described the houses and people where he had called.

"I see," said the host with a grim smile, "I understand; the first family kicked you out."

"Almost."

"The second family prayed you out."

"Almost again," smiled the stranger, "all they are both relations of mine, but I am ashamed to own them."

"They paid by way of excuse," pursued the old man, "that they were expecting a rich uncle from India who couldn't like to see a beggar about."

"Aye, my friend and we are expecting the same uncle too—an eccentric old bachelor who says he wants to make one of us his heir to his vast possessions." Two gaily mounted messengers arrived this evening to say he would be here to-night or to-morrow, probably the latter. But whenever he does come, he will find us as we are; and if he dont like our looks or the company we keep, he can take himself off again."

"Nay, my friend," said the aged stranger, rising in some trepidation, "don't for the world let my presence jeopardize your interests with your rich relation! I will merely put something to eat, and travel on to another lodging."

"No you won't," said Henry Barrett, blandly, "if we won't accept this hospitality ourselves, we won't accept this behavior to a stranger, under the roof of our father. Sit down and eat what we have got, and then you shall go to bed and rest, and in the morning you can resume your journey, or stop with us, as you please."

The traveller knew that the business of his mission was at an end, and that he was in the house of his nephew, and Attorney at New York, in search of the parents of his grandchildren, the children of his dead daughter, who had married against his wishes, and been disowned by him. He resolved to remain, and to reveal himself in the morning.

He remained in that hospitable house during the night, and was entertained like an honored guest. The next day being fair, he took his leave. As he was about to depart, Henry Barrett put a crown into his hand, saying:—

"Take it my friend, and not a word! It's little I give you, but it's as much as my circumstances will justify, and it may, perhaps, serve to keep you from starving some night, or sleeping by the roadside."

"God will repay you!" said the old man solemnly, and he walked slowly away wiping the tears from his eyes.

Long and in vain did the selfish families of Moses and Stephen Barrett look for the appearance of the rich uncle from India in a carriage and four, and great was their vexation and disappointment thereat. Then came the intelligence that he was sick in London. Next came the news that he was dead and had left a will. What an intense desire to know the contents of that will. What a wild, furious excitement when its contents became known.

To Moses Barrett he bequeathed £1, to buy a collar to bury the dog that his precious son had threatened to set on a beggar.

To Stephen Barrett he had given one pound three pence—the pound to be devoted to the parish poor—the three pence to buy cold potatoes for beggars—with the hope that he and their pious family would all put their trust in the Lord.

To Henry Barrett and his heirs forever, he had willed all the remainder of his vast wealth, some half a million pounds sterling, with a hope that he and they would sometimes recall with pleasure the visit of the old white haired man they had once so kindly received.

The old beggar of that dark, rainy night was none other than Joshua Barrett himself.

Horrible Murder, punished by five years in the Penitentiary.

Before a Military Commission held in Murfreesboro, on Sept. 9, 1863, a person named Robert Taylor, was charged with murder. He was found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to five years imprisonment. Upon hearing of it President Lincoln published the order which embodies the facts, and horrible facts they are, of the case. What will the warm friends of Slavocracy say to it?

The testimony in the case, as found in the record is brief and free from all discrepancy or contradiction. The prisoner, it seems, alleged that an amount of money had been stolen from him—how much was not stated—but there was not proof of any such theft, still less anything to connect it with the murdered woman, on whom suspicion fell. Probably, however, from apprehension of punishment, this woman, whom he claimed to own, made an attempt to run away, was pursued by the prisoner and his neighbors, captured and brought back.

The prisoner then procured a rope, and, addressing himself to the by-standers, asked if there was any one present who could tie a hang knot," when a man named Womack stepped forward and tied it. The prisoner then adjusted it around the neck of the woman, and throwing it over the limb of a tree, in the sight of his own darling, where were his wife and daughters, the work of murder began.

Finding that the woman protected herself by sinking the rope with her hands, it was slackened and her hands tied, and she was drawn up, so that her toes barely touched the ground, and in this position she was held by the prisoner until from suffocation and exhaustion her head fell on one side. Through the interposition of the prisoner's wife and the by-standers, the rope was then loosened, and an opportunity given the woman to revive. While this torture was going on, the prisoner declared his object to be to compel the woman to confess the theft charged upon her, but she stoutly denied any knowledge of the amount alleged to have been lost.

She was taken by the prisoner to the ten yard, distant two hundred or two hundred and fifty yards, and was then stripped by him of her clothes except her chemise.

In the language of one of the witnesses, she was then confined by crossing her hands and tying them together, then putting them over her knees with a stick thrust under, holding them in that position. Their prisoner had lying ostentatiously on her face and on her side, at the pleasure of her tormentor required, for some two hours and a half, with brief intervals, she was whipped by the prisoner with a leather strap, having a knot on the end. At the conclusion of this time, "some neighbors present said they thought he had whipped her about enough for that time," and, he thereupon desisted. She was then raised, and assisted by one of her neighbors, towards the kitchen, staggering and falling several times from exhaustion on the way.

She succeeded, however, in reaching the kitchen, or, the threshold of which, in the presence of the prisoner's wife and four women (hereafter named). She was taken with which purpose you have clearly pointed to do, and that by using the extraordinary element of fear, to which you have resorted in the last grill. Finally that if, after many thousands of years of civilization, thankless men pretty much unanimously regard their being on verge of existing pecuniary difficulties more to be dreaded than the loss of life, war must be regarded as inevitable. But I cannot look upon it as lucky or desirable. I would rather not see any blessings in that form, supernatural either. As well might one pray heaven to bless gunpowder and greek fire. I would rather not have any military chaplains; their office seems to be a wicked superadd. I know well enough that the warrior will be to the Christian nations story or war is a civilized method. Do they? Oh, no of fact! There is one of Mr. Gardner's photographs representing a dead soldier on the battle of Antietam. A shell has caught him in the middle, ripped him up and scattered his bowels about. There, then, are some practically depicted. This is what our civilization has come to. A free government, religious toleration, universal education, the cannon's obscure, and a skilful photographic operator—and the result of all these wonderful organs of civilization is a row with a hole in his stomach and his entrails protruding! This to civilization is worthy. I suppose there's still more civilized implement of destruction than a deer, or a tomahawk. Canister bullets are more humane—of course, than slugs. And yet I have heard Christian clergymen appealing vehement platitudes about "the God of Battles"—as though there was ever, or ever could be, a God of Battle, any more than there could be a God of Famine and Blood and Desolation."

HOW THE DEBT ROLLS UP.

Mr. Chase, the Finance Minister at Washington has been very busy manufacturing greenbacks, for the past two years or more. Some people are puzzled for knowing how he gets rich for them, because that gold is now at a premium of ninety-one per cent. The following will explain the process:—

The last issue of the paper money was called the "Ten-Forty," which means that the Government might either redeem the bonds in ten or let them run for forty years bearing annually 6 per cent interest to the holder. Any person who has now $100 in specie may invest it in government securities, and obtain for it $191 bearing interest at the rate of five per cent., giving an annuity of $9.55 or nearly ten per cent for the capital invested, and at the end of ten, twenty or forty years, nearly double the original investment.

Supposing the daily expenses to be $2,000,000 which is rarely less than the mark, this sum is doubled within 11 years, and if the bonds are then redeemed, it will require nearly another 100 per cent, to take up the bonds, making $6,000,000 of debt for every day that the war is prolonged—a happy state of affairs to look forward to for another four years—looking on addition to the present national debt of $3,760,000,000 to say nothing of the destruction of property and loss of life is that time. A fine prospect for immigrants!

A Strong Case against Dueling.

Lord Byron, if it is well known, was much galled with some severe strictures made by Southey, the poet, on his character and writings, and pronounced his intention of stamping "the satisfaction due to a gentleman." For some reason the challenge was never sent, but, in anticipation of it, the Laureate prepared the following reply, which was found among his papers:

Sir:—I have the honor of acknowledging the receipt of your letter; and do myself the pleasure of replying to it without delay. In affairs of this kind the parties ought to meet on equal terms. But to establish equality between you and me, three things must be done; and then a fourth becomes necessary before I can meet you on the field. First—you must marry and have four children; please to take particular in having them girls.—Second—you must prove that the greater part of the provision you make for them depends on your life, and you must be under bonds of four thousand pounds not to be hanged, not to commit suicide, and not to be killed in a duel—which are the contingencies upon which I effected an insurance on my own life for the benefit of my wife and daughters. Third—I must tell three distinct falsehoods concerning you upon the hustings, or in some other as less public assembly; and I shall neither be able to do this, nor to meet you afterward in the manner you propose, unless you first perform the fourth thing—which is:—You must contrive to commit the Christian sin of Pride, that the devil may have no handle against you. Pride must be carried on without the use of any more iron than is necessary for blacking our ink or mending our pens; or any more lead than enters into the composition of the Edinburgh Review." I have the honor to subscribe myself, sir, yours, with all proper consideration."

SLEEPING WITH OPEN WINDOWS.—A letter in the London Times says:—"There can be no doubt of the beneficial effects to health of a free communication at night of the air of the sleeping room with the external air. This seems to be becoming more and more pressed upon the minds of the public, in opposition to the old notion of the noxious quality of night air. We remember to have read an account a few years back of the testimony of a gentleman advanced in years, we believe a clergyman, who attributed his health and prolonged age entirely to sleeping in a room with the upon windows. From my earliest life I have, whenever I could, slept with my bed-room window partially opened, and have always found that cold early exercise in the open air the best of medicine."

War and Religion.

George Augustus Sala thus writes on the American war. Doubtless there is more truths in his remarks than many are willing to admit:—

"The general told us that the gentleman in black was a missionary. There is an organization called the "Christian Commission," which, in plain parlance, is among the Sanitary Commission very hard. Many of these good gentlemen have been subscribed to purchase Bibles, Testaments, and to print tracts for distribution among the soldiers. It does not appear to strike anyone—and this is a matter that should come home to my own countrymen as well as to the Americans—that war is a matter with which religion can have directly nothing to do, and that by using the extraordinary element of fear, to which you have resorted in the last grill. Finally that if, after many thousands of years of civilization, thankless men pretty much unanimously regard their being on verge of existing pecuniary difficulties more to be dreaded than the loss of life, war must be regarded as inevitable. But I cannot look upon it as lucky or desirable. I would rather not see any blessings in that form, supernatural either. As well might one pray heaven to bless gunpowder and greek fire. I would rather not have any military chaplains; their office seems to be a wicked superadd. I know well enough that the warrior will be to the Christian nations story or war is a civilized method. Do they? Oh, no of fact! There is one of Mr. Gardner's photographs representing a dead soldier on the battle of Antietam. A shell has caught him in the middle, ripped him up and scattered his bowels about. There, then, are some practically depicted. This is what our civilization has come to. A free government, religious toleration, universal education, the cannon's obscure, and a skilful photographic operator—and the result of all these wonderful organs of civilization is a row with a hole in his stomach and his entrails protruding! This to civilization is worthy. I suppose there's still more civilized implement of destruction than a deer, or a tomahawk. Canister bullets are more humane—of course, than slugs. And yet I have heard Christian clergymen appealing vehement platitudes about "the God of Battles"—as though there was ever, or ever could be, a God of Battle, any more than there could be a God of Famine and Blood and Desolation."

Resting and Extraordinary Scene.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Press with Gen. Banks' army gives the following graphic description of the panic among the Federal troops and teamsters during the first days fight near Mansfield, La.:—

"It is one of the most unaccountable freaks that a general or courage can control. I find it impossible to describe a scene so sudden and bewildering. Though I was present, partly as actor, partly as spectator, and saw everything that took place, the battle was progressing vigorously. The cavalry firing was loud and continuous, and hearing reserved from the danger experienced by Ransom division, we felt secure of the position. I was slowly riding along the edge of a wood, conversing with a friend who had just ridden up, about the events and prospects of the day. We had drawn into the side of the road to allow an ammunition waggon to pass, and although many were observed going to the rear, some on foot and some on horseback, we regarded it as an occurrence familiar to every battle, and it occasioned nothing but a passing remark. I noticed that the most of those thus wildly rating to the rear were negroes, hangers-on, and cowards—men, for now that we have gone so deeply in this slave-holding country every non-commissioned officer has a servant, and every servant a mule. These people were the first to show any panic, but their scamper along the road gave only pleasure to the soldiers, who pelted them with stones, and whipped their flying animals with sticks to increase their speed. Suddenly there was a rush, a shout, the crushing of trees, the breaking down of rails, the rush and scamper of men. It was as sudden as if a thunderbolt had fallen amongst us, and set the woods on fire. What caused it, or how it commenced no one knew. I turned to my companion to enquire the reason of this extraordinary proceeding, but before he had a chance to reply, we found ourselves swallowed up as it were in a hissing, seething, bubbling whirlpool of agitated men. We could not avoid the current, we could not stem it, and if we hoped to live in that mad company we must ride with the rest of them. Our line of battle had given way. Gen. Banks took off his hat and implored his men to remain; his staff officers did the same; but it was of no avail. Then the General drew his sabre and endeavored to rally his men, but they would not think. Behind him the rebels were shouting and advancing. Their marked balls filling the air with that strange life-reaping sound that war has made familiar to our fighting men. The teams were abandoned by the drivers, the traces cut, and the animals ridden off by fatigued men. Bareheaded men rode with agony in their faces, and for at least five minutes it seemed as if it were going to destruction altogether. It was my fortune to see the last battle of Bull Run, and to be among those who made the celebrated midnight retreat towards Washington. The retreat of the 4th division was in such a route as that of the first Federal army, with the exception that fewer men were engaged, and our men fought here with a valor that was not shown upon that serious, and, mock-heroic day of July. We rode nearly two miles in this maddening way, until on the edge of a swamp, which might formerly have been a bayou, we found Emory's division drawn up in line. Our retreating men fell beyond this line, and Emory prepared to meet the rebels. They came with a rush, and on the shelter of night crept over the two-rope they transversed our area. Emory fired three rounds and the rebels retreated. This ended the fight. The enemy fell back, taking with them some of the waggons that were left and a number of the guns that were abandoned.

Fenian Movements.

The Fenian movements have been the chief topic of interest during the week. Large numbers of men have been drilling in various parts of the country, and the Government have been fully aware of the fact. Many arrests have been made, and the prisons are filled with the accused. Large quantities of arms have been seized, and the Fenian leaders have been completely foiled in their plans. The Fenian Brotherhood in the United States have been in a state of great excitement, and have been preparing for a descent upon Canada. The Fenian Senate have been in session, and have issued a proclamation declaring that the Fenian Brotherhood are not responsible for the acts of any persons who may have joined the Fenian movement, and that they will not be responsible for any debts contracted by any persons in the name of the Fenian Brotherhood. LIFE IN NEW ZEALAND.

We extract the following from a private letter received from near Wellington, New Zealand, dated 29th February, 1864:—

"We have rather stirring events out here since I last wrote, and about eight months ago we were in daily expectation of a hostile visit from the Alabama, so much so that we always remained within hail of one another, and slept with loaded arms at our bedsides. Things at last became so alarming, from the warlike attitude of the blacks, that the settlers formed themselves into a volunteer corps, the company being commanded by my brother, and numbering thirty men of very excellent quality. My two brothers are privates, and one of our men, an old 63d, is a sergeant. There were great doubts at the time how we were to get our arms, as the Enfields stored that not a soldier or rifle should cross the Remutaka to mountain pass on the direct road to Wellington, where fifty thieves could stop a whole army, if they liked to do so). The Government at Wellington were afraid to send up the rifles under a military escort for fear of precipitating a row. So one of the regular carriers who goes down every week to Wellington undertook, if the thing were kept quiet, to bring them up as a part of his regular load. He is a resolute dare—devil fellow, and having armed himself with revolvers up to his eyes, he brought up three hundred stand of rifles and bayonets, with the necessary accoutrements and ball cartridge, and landed them safely at———, all "unbeknown" to the Maories. An order from Wellington has having arrived directing a guard to be placed over them until they were distributed, Captain———despatched a sergeant with orders to lay hold of any volunteers and press them for a guard for the night, which happened to be yesterday. Divers unsuspecting fellows were having their Saturday night half-pint when they were at once pounced on and detained as guards until next morning, when the arms were served out. A corporal from her Majesty's 18th, from Wellington, was sent up here to drill the men, and stopped at our place for ten weeks. The distribution of arms had a wonderful effect, for the Maories had been in the habit of openly parading with spears and double-barrelled guns to the number of sixty or seventy, and sometimes one hundred, within a few miles of us, and in all directions, with the openly avowed intention of breaking out directly they heard that our troops in the north had been repulsed, which they daily expected to hear; but this little slight of hand in getting the arms up has quite damped them in those parts. It was a somewhat dangerous experiment to send the arms up without an escort, as three hundred stand would have been a splendid prize for the "niggers."

A REMEDY FOR CATERPILLARS.

Our readers, or at least those of them who have not lost all their garden fruit from the depredations of the caterpillar, will be glad to learn that at length a remedy has been discovered. The Leader of Tuesday contains the following in its editorial columns:—"That Coal-oil will cause instant death to these pests has been proved beyond all doubt. On Saturday last a letter was received at The Leader Office, for publication, from one of our subscribers, an extensive farmer in the Township of Clark, County of Durham, stating the fact that, as a last resort to destroy caterpillars, (which had almost taken entire possession of the trees in his orchard) he experimented with coal-oil. Complete success attended the experiment. A brush of soft feathers was made and portions of the trees smeared with the oil, in addition to placing a small quantity on the posts. [illegible] himself: "The properties of The Leader at once tested the oil on the trees at Glengrove Farm, Young street, where the caterpillars had collected in thousands, doing fearful damage. In a couple of hours the quest of it had cleared the orchard completely of caterpillars.—The dead lay around in all directions. The effect of the oil on the pests seemed instantaneous; there was no long delay to undergo, for one touch of the deadly substance to the nests spread desolation in all directions. The is, certainly, a cheap remedy, as will suit more also, and all our subscribers troubled with caterpillars should adopt it. The valuable remedy just named is time for a Post Gazette friend, and will, no doubt, prove of universal benefit to fruit-growers."

WIDOW MAGEE'S LAMENT.

BY A MAYO.

My husband one day,
Died out of the way,
And a jewel of a husband that same was to me;
Morning, noon, and midday,
For his soul's peace I pray,
Even grief is a pleasure to Widow Magee
For his spirit had fled,
Seven days, he was dead,
My last great request, is a small one you see;
All lovers deny
Till my grave is quite dry,
Then be blest he, and she'll, bid poor
Dinah Magee.

It's a month and a day
While the earth had his clay,
Phember shines on his grave out of pity to me;
It's as dry as a bone,
So young Michael Malone
May now pop the question to Widow Magee.
I've been to see love,
With each glee;
'Twas himself made them smile,
Just my grief to beguile,
And dreaming the heart of poor Widow
To keep wolves from the door,
And sure I'm a
'Tis 'until steady I pine,
No heart bates against mine,
And I mope wid my males, breakfast, dinner and tea;
I look in his chair,
To take Vid rademond poor Widow Magee.

No one praises my face,
Nor finds fault with my dress,
Have the house to themselves,
And grin and contempt at poor Widow
The dogs and the cats,
And even the rats,
Have grown indipindent, and care nought
for me;
Wid Michael don't try,
I've a youth in my eye.
Where eyes whisper secrets to Widow Magee.

A TIPPERARY TURK.

During the operation of the allies in the Crimea it was resolved to relay the water is from a beautiful spring to the finest croton of the camp. Leather pipe or hose was employed, which was laid on the ground. One Saturday, while the hose was being supplied, the minaret sounded to prayers, and one of the Turkish soldiers immediately set to his ablutions to praise Allah. Unfortunately, he went down upon the hose, and his weight suddenly stopped the current of their "first of elements," as Pindar calls water.

"Get up," cried an English soldier,
"Voulez vous avez la bonte...mon cher Monsieur le Turque," cried a Frenchman, with his native politeness.

"That ain't the dodge to make a Turk more," cried another. "This is the dodge," So saying he knocked the turban off. Still the pious Mussulman went on with his devotion.

"I'll make him stir his stumps," said the other Englishman, giving him a remarkably hard kick, to the wonder of all, still the unturbaned, well-kicked follower of the prophet went on praying as though he was

"Don't you see, sir—I'll show how we serve obstinate folks at auld Reekie," quietly observed a Scotchman—he was, however prevented, for the Turk, having finished his "Allah ren en allah," rose and began taking off his coat—then to roll up his sleeves, and then to "put him off" in the most approved boxing fashion, a la Yankee pugilism. He then advanced in the true Tom Sayer style to the Englishman who had kicked him in the lumber region.

"A ring! a ring!" shouted the soldiers and sailors, perfectly astonished to see a Turk such an adept at the fistic art.

The Englishman nothing loath to have a bit of fun with the Turk, of such a John bull turn of mind set to work; but found that he had met his master. In five minutes he had received his quantum sufficit. As the Turk coolly replaced his coat and turban, he turned around and said to the admiring bystanders, in the pure brogue:

"Bac luck to ye, ye spalpeens! whin ye'er after kickin' a Turk, be sure he's not an Irishman."

The mystery was solved—the turk was a Tipperary man.

A Driver of a stage, who was addicted to swearing, was rebuked by a passenger, who asked the wicked John to remember the example of Job, whose patience was so remarkable. "Job," said the wretch with a fearful snarl, "who did he drive?"

A stuck-up-sort of a genius entered a shop, and turning up his nose at some apples in the window, exclaimed, "are those apples for sale?" "No, sir," replied the shopkeeper, "I know of that by the look of them."

An Irish gentleman, having taken home a new bonnet for his servant Biddy, in order to enjoy her surprise. Next morning, first thing Biddy bounded into the breakfast-room, exclaiming, "Be japers, I've got him." "Got what?" asked the head of the house, feigning surprise. "The bathea bed-bug that's been atein the childer the last month; I've got him sure."

One of that unhappy fraternity, the poets, sighs and talks as follows of his bliss:—"A pair of sweet lips, a pressure of two delicate hands, and a pink waist ribbon, will be as much to unhinge a man as three fevers, the measles, a large sized whooping-cough, a pair of lock jaws, a hydrophobias, and the doctor's bill."

If a lady in a red cloak were to cross a field in which was a goat, what wonderful intelligence should probably take place? The goat would "spread the tale" to butter, and the lady into a scarlet runner.

A German mother out West taught her little daughter to pray. She had repeated it two evenings. On the third evening she was surprised by the following request: "Mother, what does Dutch mean?" The mother was somewhat surprised by the following request; "Ma, why do we always talk Yankee and pray German? Is God Dutch?"

How do the Scotch Rifles.—
Perform the shooting?
Turn out much better shots
At long distance, than most English are,
But this we all know
That a Scotchman could do—
Make a small piece of metal go swiftly for.

An Odd Job.—"Here the jury agreed," said the bailiff of a locked up out of twelve, whom he had kept under care of his man, Denny Gary, and whom he met on the stairs eating a jug in his hand. "Oh, yes," replied Denny, "they have agrade to sind out for another half-gallon.

ATTENTION is directed to the rates of premiums adopted by this Company, which will compare favorably with that of any other institution in Canada. Investments of Company's funds to the large amount of nearly five hundred thousand dollars have been completed in Canada; and as all business transactions are finally disposed of in the Province, the Scottish Provincial offers all the facilities presented by a purely local Company, while it possesses the additional advantage of its large capital, and an influential and responsible body of shareholders in Great Britain.

Policies effected on or before 31st January next will receive a full year's bonus over those effected thereafter.

THE undersigned, while thanking the public in general for the liberal patronage they have bestowed on him, since his commencement in business, begs to state that he continues to manufacture his celebrated

PATENT WATER-DRAWER!
AT ELVIRE MILLS.

You must remember that by buying one of my Water-drawers you get your water pure, which you cannot do by a suction Pump; I warrant them NOT TO FREEZE, and to stand as long, if not longer, than any Pump; and, besides, you save over fifty per cent. From all them cheaper than any Pump-maker in Canada! If anything goes astray by fair play within one year from the time of purchase, I bind myself to re-place it; so you cannot be deceived. Now, any one who is in need of a Pump would do well to get one of my Water-drawers at once. I have two teams out at all times to deliver them, and persons residing at a distance will receive prompt attention by sending a letter to the undersigned

Sir,—I am most happy to state that my wife used Henry's Vermont Liniment, having accidentally got a needle run under her finger nail. The pain was most intense; but by using the Liniment, the pain was gone in a few minutes.
Yours very respectfully,

Messrs. Henry & Co.
Having on various occasions used your Liniment, I am happy to say that I have always found it beneficial. I have frequently used it for Bowel Complaint, and I have never known it to fail in effecting a cure. I think it the best medicine I ever used for Diarrhœa whenever complaint, and disorders of a similar character I have also found it a never failing specific for Colds, and for affections of the head. I always recommend it to my friends, and would not be without it in the house for any considerable time.

N. H. DOWN'S
VEGETABLE BALSAMIC
ELIXIR.

A CERTIFICATE
WORTH A MILLION.

An Old Physician's Testimony.

READ!

Waterbury, Vt.,
Nov. 24th, 1858.

Although I do not like the practice of Physicians recommending indiscriminately, the patent medicines of the day; yet after a trial of ten years, I am free to admit that there is one medicine before the public that any Physician can use in his practice, and recommend to the public with perfect confidence; that medicine is Rev. N. H. Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

I have used it myself with the very best success, and now, whenever I am troubled with a Cough or Cold, I invariably use it. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are suffering from a Cold or a Cough, for the Croup, Whooping Cough, and all diseases tending to consumption, and to the Profession as a reliable article.

I am satisfied of its excellence beyond a doubt, having conversed personally with the Rev. N. H. Downs himself. He informed me of the principal ingredients of which the Elixir is composed, all of which are purely Vegetable and perfectly safe.

J. B. Woodward, M.D.
Now Brigade Surgeon U. S. Army.

This popular remedy is no longer an experiment. Thousands of people who have used it, bear witness to its superior excellence as a Liniment and a Painkiller. Full directions accompanying each bottle. It may be used externally for

Rheumatism,
Neuralgia,
Tooth-ache,
Headache,
Burns,
Scalds,
Bruises & Swellings
Sore Throat,
Lumbago,
&c., &c.

and may be used internally for

Cholic and Colds,
Cholic & Cholera Morbus,
Bowel Complaints,
Diarrhœa,
Wind Cholic,
&c., &c.

Much might be said of its remedial properties and magical effects, but the limited space of this Advertisement will only admit of especial summary.

It is prepared with care; great pains being taken to attain an exact proportion of each of its ingredients, in such a manner that the combination shall be perfect, in every respect, at once more rapid in its operation, and more effectual than any other similar medicine.

☞ A single Teaspoonful taken in warm water or otherwise as the taste may dictate, checks Diarrhœa,—Cholic, and all Bowel Complaints,—within a few minutes, and in a short space of time, a perfect health is restored.

Should always keep this Family Physician at hand; and by its timely use save hundreds of dollars that would otherwise be swallowed up in discharging doctor's fees.

☞ Sold at every Drug and country store throughout Canada.

BE MERCIFUL.

If you knew the cares and longing
Lieing in your neighbors breast,
If you knew his highest yearnings,
Giving to his soul no rest;
Of his weariness and watching,
Of his deep and bitter woes,
Of the trials and temptations
In his path where'er he goes;
You would not so often chide him,
For his lack of joy and cheer,
For the shadows that hang o'er him
That seem always by him near

Then be merciful unto him,
Do not chide him for his woe,
For his heart hath its own sorrow;
Which our own may never know;
Still be merciful unto him;
Strive to give him hope and cheer,
Have a heart for all his sorrows,
And a sigh for every tear;
Least our heavenly father Judge us
As we Judge our fellow men,
For the measure that is meted,
Shall be measured out again.

MISTAKEN IDENTITY.

From Once a Week.

Among the articles found in Durand's portmanteau were several letters enclosed in an elastic band. The style indicated that they had been written by a woman, and one in the habit of expressing her feelings without reserve; but the handwriting was to all appearance that of a man. The envelopes in which they had been originally enclosed were missing, and there was no expression in either of them, with one exception, which could point to the writer; but this was thought significant. It ran thus:—"Beaglescombe is the nearest station, but it would be more prudent to go to the next beyond and return by way of Beaglescombe, where, if you love me as dearly as you affirm you do, I should think you might remain for a few days. There is a nice quiet inn I have often passed, between the station and West Topham, where I should think you could live a little while very comfortably." These letters were shown by the police superintendent to persons who knew Miss Thorold's writing, but these denied that they had ever seen such writing before. However, the post-mistress of Selton, which was the nearest village to the Grange, identified the handwriting as being the same she had seen on one or two letters every day for some days before Mr. Thorold's murder. Some of them, she could remember, were addressed to Scarborough, and she thought she could remember the name of Wolverhampton also, but was not sure. She had several times wondered who it could be who wrote in such a curious hand, but had come to the conclusion at last that it must be some gentleman at the Grange. On Heather concluding his evidence, one of the letters was placed in his hands, and he was asked if he knew the writing. He looked as if he were about to faint when he saw it; but, after reading a few lines he became re-assured, and said, after a good deal of hesitation, that Miss Thorold sometimes wrote in that hand. Being asked if he had received any letters from her in similar handwriting, he admitted he had; and, being further pressed as to whether he had kept any of those letters, since none of the servants had ever seen her write in such an unlikely hand, he answered that he believed she wrote them in the summer-house in the shrubbery.

These letters told heavily against the prisoner, otherwise the evidence in his favor was almost equal to that against him. He denied in the most solemn manner that he had ever seen Miss Thorold, or heard her name before his apprehension on the charge of murdering her father. That his motive in coming to Beaglescombe had nothing to do with that family, though he declined to say what that motive was. He also refused to account for his possession of the letters, though he affirmed they had not been addressed to him. Neither would he then, or afterwards, give any information as to who he was, so could anything be discovered respecting him. The evidence in his favor was that of the people at the hotel: all of whom swore that he never left the house from the time he entered it until about two hours before the policeman took him away. In the face of evidence so positive as this, the jury would not have hesitated to acquit him, in the belief that it was a remarkable case of mistaken identity, had it not been for the letters. At the conclusion of the examination of the witnesses it was so late that the judge announced his intention to defer the summing up till the following morning.

He had not begun the summing up, when the council for the prosecution rose and said that he had some additional evidence to offer which had come to light since the court rose the preceding evening. The evidence was that of a policeman, who, after Heather's examination, had been despatched to make a search in the summer-house where he had stated Miss Thorold wrote her letters. The search was not without result. On lowering one of the back shutters, two or three sheets of blotting paper were found, and scattered among the moss of barrels and other shrubs some very small pieces of paper, which proved to be a part of an envelope. These bits of paper were arranged, and it was then seen that the hand-writing on them was the same as that of the letters found among the prisoner's luggage; nor was this the most important part of this discovery, for it turned out that the letters written formed the greater part of the prisoner's name. Durand on hearing the above read great emotion, and every eye was turned upon him to see if he were going to make any observation; but he did not utter a word. The judge then proceeded to sum up; and it was evident that he, and the jury also, were much relieved by the discovery which had been made. The verdict was given without even the hesitation which jurys usually consider it decent to effect even when they have thoroughly made up their minds before the close of the trial, it was Guilty; and he was sentenced to be executed in the usual form.

Immediately after the conviction he was visited by the most influential persons in the neighborhood, all of whom urged him to reveal what had become of Miss Thorold; and promised, if he would do that, they would use their utmost endeavor to save his life. At first he received them with politeness, but he eventually became so weary of their importunities that he asked to be protected from them. There was one member of the bar—he who had acted as his counsel—who really believed that Durand had not intended to kill Mr. Thorold. His idea was, that having ascended by means of the ladder to Miss Thorold's room, he had been surprised there by her father; and to prevent the latter from making a disturbance he had caught up the rag nearest at hand, which happened to be Miss Thorold's handkerchief, and emptied a bottle of chloroform into it, which she was in the habit of using to stifle moths, beetles, and other insects she collected and preserved; and that he had then pressed this on Mr. Thorold's face, there causing his death. When he suggested this to the condemned man, the latter denied as persistently as he had done all along, that he had ever seen or heard of Mr. Thorold, and nothing could induce him to change his story. Difficult as it was to doubt of Durand's guilt, this persistency was not without its usual effect; and in the end there was not wanting those who petitioned that his life might be spared on the ground suggested by his counsel.—His good name was another recommendation in his favor; and it was generally felt among the circuit that if Miss Thorold had come forward and acknowledged that he had ascended to her room with her consent, the convicted man might have escaped with a comparatively light punishment.—The sympathy which would have been felt for him was, however, checked by the suspicion that Miss Thorold had met the same fate as her father. Nevertheless, some efforts were made on his behalf to procure a mitigation of punishment, on the ground that he had not intended to do more than reduce Mr. Thorold to insensibility while he made his escape with his daughter; the ultimate effect of which was that his sentence was commuted to transportation for life.

It so happened, that in this particular instance a discovery was actually made a few months after the trial which established his innocence as regarded Miss Thorold.—The heir to Laverstock Grange did not come to live there until he had made a long tour on the continent with his family; and in the meantime the place was shut up.—Before his return, the junior partner of the firm who managed the estate, was requested to go down and superintend the renovations, and to see that everything was put in proper order. Things were restored to their old footing; that is to say, men who had been sent to do other work were brought back to work in the garden, the shrubberies, and so forth; and among them was one whose duty it had been to take charge of the ice store. This was a cave in the thickest part of the shrubbery, excavated deep in the earth, the entrance to which was reached by a long ladder. Taking a lantern with him, the man entered the cave to ascertain what quantity of ice remained in it, and directly afterwards he began to cry out for help. Some men working in the shrubbery heard his cries, and hastened to the spot. They found him making frantic efforts to climb the ladder, but so great was his terror, that he had not strength to ascend it. To their inquiries of what was the matter, he kept repeating "Miss Thorold! Miss Thorold!" The men being in sufficient number to give each other courage, went down to his assistance; and on entering the ice-house they saw Miss Thorold crouched on the ice in one corner, her eyes wide open, and her appearance so much like that of a living being, that they called to her by name several times before they ventured to touch her. The medical men who saw her before she was removed from the place, was of opinion that her death was caused by excitement, or by the extreme cold of the ice-house, and not by starvation.

The supposition was, that in the frenzy of horror and terror, she had lost her intellect, and had descended the ladder by which Durand had mounted to her room, and in trying to bury herself in the shrubbery she had taken the path which led to the ice house, and had either fallen down the hole, or got down the ladder and, thinking only of concealing herself, had scrambled over the ice covered ice to the farthest corner of the cave, where she had been frozen to death.

All this came to our knowledge the next time we traveled the circuit, but Durand was by that time, as we supposed, making his way in Australia, and nobody seemed to think it worth while to make any inquiries about him, with a view to procure a further mitigation of his punishment.

Very soon after this, succeeding that my success at the English bar was not in proportion to my merits, I determined on going to practice in New South Wales, at that time not overstocked with workmen of our profession.

Having one day seen a paragraph in an English newspaper which referred that Durand the murderer of Mr. Thorold had disappeared from the penal settlement to which he had been consigned, in a perfectly unaccountable manner, I took it into my head one morning to ask an old convict who was employed about the court-house if he knew of the arrival of such a person in the colony. The question was asked without the remotest idea that he could answer it; in fact, it was asked from mere idleness at the moment, and almost involuntarily. To my utter surprise, before the old man had time to recollect his answer for an answer, I saw a man rising from a seat near my right hand, whom I recognized as Jesse Durand. His appearance was so much altered by the encroachment of great part of his face with a thick mass of hair, that if my mind had not been occupied at the moment with the recollection of him, I do not think I should have recognized him. I hurried with him to the other side of the court, and he stood till I joined him. "How long has Macpherson been in Australia?" I inquired of him, with the object of leaving

THE MINISTERIAL CRISIS.

It seems Canada is fated to be continually in the midst of a political crisis. A defeat of the Ministry every two or three months and a dissolution of Parliament every year has come to be looked upon as a matter of course. It is a pity such should be the case, but as it is, and, until some means have been found to arrange the sectional differences that prevail, no better state of things can be hoped for. We earnestly hope that the almost deadlock to which we have arrived will have the effect of leading men of all parties seriously to consider what ought to be done to prevent a continual recurrence of such disastrous proceedings. The public credit of the Province is suffering immensely, and the availability of the Country for settlement is almost wholly lost sight of in Europe because our internal squabbles leave us no time to consider how best to improve the many advantages nature has so profusely endowed us with. An immense emigration takes place annually from Europe, but extremely little of it finds its way into Canada, mainly because we are always at loggerheads among ourselves. In order that our readers may understand how the present crisis came about, we shorten from the Globe of Friday last a very lucid statement of its cause:—"A number of years ago the city of Montreal issued debentures, on its own responsibility, for the benefit of the Atlantic and St. Lawrence Railway, to the amount of $100,000. For good and sufficient reasons—into an explanation of which we need not now enter, as they are not material to the point at issue—the Grand Trunk made itself responsible for the amount. Thus the purchasers of the bonds looked to the city for payment, while the city looked to the Grand Trunk Railway. The Province had nothing to do with the transaction at all.

In 1859 the bonds fell due. The Company were in no condition to find the requisite cash for their redemption, but unless they did so it was likely to go hard with them. The holders of the bonds would, of course, press the city for their money. The city would, of course, press the Grand Trunk. What was to be done? In the midst of the dilemma Mr. Galt stepped forward, kindly paid the cash out of the Provincial chest, and took in exchange the city bonds; the Railway, as well as the city, being still responsible for the amount. Mr. Galt stipulated to hold the bonds until redeemed by the city. So long as he did not press for the $100,000 he had loaned, Montreal was not likely to press the Grand Trunk. The real effect of the transaction then was, an advance of $100,000 to the Railway by the Province, with Montreal as security.

We have seen that it was stipulated Mr. Galt should hold the $100,000 worth of debentures until redeemed by the city. But he did not do this. On the 13th September, 1859—the year in which the advance was made—he handed over the whole of the debentures to the City Treasurer of Montreal. That is to say, he gave up the securities for the repayment of the debt which had been given him by the richest municipal corporation in Canada, and left the Province to look to the all but bankrupt Grand Trunk for repayment.

This is the fact. Mr. Galt says it is not. He alleges that the Provincial agents in England, Messrs. Glyn, Mills & Co., agreed to Credit the Province with $100,000, and to charge the Grand Trunk Railway with it. The statement is a strange one. Because:—

First. If the arrangement was made, it ought to have been made before Mr. Galt gave up the debentures to the city, and if it had been made, Mr. Galt would surely have had something to shew that the large sum of $100,000 had been arranged for; but there is not the scrape of a pen on the subject.

Secondly. The debentures were surrendered to the city on the 13th September. It is not until the 28th of December following that Mr. Galt, even by his own shewing, did anything to secure the Province from loss by the transaction. And even then we have no evidence but Mr. Galt's own word that he did anything in the matter. Look at the facts:

First. Mr. Galt left no written evidence whatever to prove that such a bargain with the Provincial agents in England was made, and of course they deny the whole matter.

Secondly. During the two years and a half that Mr. Galt continued in power, subsequent to the alleged bargain, the Provincial agents rendered their account half yearly, and never once gave any credit for the sum, nor does it appear that Mr. Galt ever complained that they omitted to credit the Province with this immense sum. In fact he did not appear to become aware that the sum was lost to the Province till a few days before he left office.

Thirdly. The transaction was not publicly known until after the defeat of the Cartier-Macdonald Ministry. Three years passed over, and everything was kept dark. In 1862, the Macdonald-Sicotte Ministry was formed, and the Financial Commission sat. Then, for the first time, the affair appeared in its true character. Mr. Galt gave his explanation. Mr. Howland, his successor, visited England, and enquired into the matter. The Provincial agents at once declared that Mr. Galt never made any bargain of the kind at all with them. They never heard of it—they knew nothing about it, and they decline to be responsible for the misery. The end of it is that the Province has to look to the Grand Trunk for repayment.

It is upon this disgraceful transaction that the House has just pronounced a condemnatory verdict. The History of which Mr. Galt is a leading actor, is full of just such transactions as that which exhibits its pages. Throughout his previous administration of affairs, Mr. Galt was constantly getting himself and his colleagues into hot water, and part of the discomfort he has had to endure whether Mr. Galt's story is true or untrue, but whether the constitutional practice of spending money without consent of Parliament is to be tolerated. Admitting everything he says, it remains undoubted that he took this $100,000 from the public chest, without any more right to do so than his own clerk has to give away money deposited in his keeping. No more flagrant breach of the constitution can be conceived.

When the facts as above stated, came to be thoroughly understood, Mr. Dorion moved an address to His Excellency the Governor General reciting the facts and ending by saying that "in view of the facts above recited, this House would be failing in its duty it did not express its disapprobation of an unauthorized advance of a large amount of public money, and of the consequent departure from the conditions of the Order in Council under which the advance was made." On a division 60 votes were recorded in favor of Mr. Dorion's motion, and 58 against it. Among those who voted for this outrageous waste of the public funds was our member, Mr. Cooper, who, it will be recollected, in his address to the electors in 1861, says:—"I shall oppose any expenditure of the public money without the sanction of Parliament. It is a pity such should be the case, but as it is, and, until some means have been found to arrange the sectional differences that prevail, no better state of things can be hoped for. We earnestly hope that the almost deadlock to which we have arrived will have the effect of leading men of all parties seriously to consider what ought to be done to prevent a continual recurrence of such disastrous proceedings. Mr. Howland, his successor, visited England, and enquired into the matter. The Provincial agents at once declared that Mr. Galt never made any bargain of the kind at all with them. They never heard of it—they knew nothing about it, and they decline to be responsible for the misery. The end of it is that the Province has to look to the Grand Trunk for repayment.

On Monday morning, Messrs McDonald, Cartier, and Galt met Mr. Brown at his rooms in the St. Louis Hotel, and resumed the negotiations. In the course of the morning Sir E. P. Taché joined them, when the conference was transferred to the executive Council Rooms. A basis of the proposition which would be acceptable to the Government, and which Mr. Brown would be prepared to submit to his friends was almost reached when the time for the meeting of the House arrived. Mr. McDonald again asked and was kindly allowed an adjournment. He stated that he had the honor to inform the House, that after the adjournment on Friday last, a conference was held between three members of the Government and the Hon. member for South Oxford, for the purpose of establishing a basis on which future governmental action might be had. They had several meetings also on Saturday, and two to-day, and he was enabled to state, that although the questions which had arisen were of the very gravest character, and although the difficulties were very great which surrounded any attempt at such a solution as they hoped would settle the sectional feelings between the two sections of the Province, yet they had made progress—they considered very great progress, and such progress that there was every reason to hope that they would be able to arrive at a basis on which both parties could agree. But the question was so complex in its nature, and there was so many points to be considered, that they had not been able to arrive at a conclusion which they could present to the House.

When the House met on Tuesday, Mr. McDonald asked another adjournment, saying I have the gratification of being able to inform the House that a basis has been agreed on, on which the hon. members for South Oxford, and the members of the Government alone. We have arrived at some length, and have now only to work out the details. The latter discussions have taken place not only between the members for South Oxford and the members of the Government who conferred with Mr. Brown, but also with the Upper Canada members generally. The details have yet to be worked out. I hope, however, that we will be in a position to submit the details in full to-morrow, with a comprehensive statement of all the negotiations that have taken place. With that view I have to ask an adjournment of the House till to-morrow.

The adjournment was also granted, notwithstanding the anxiety of members to have the business pushed as soon as possible. After the adjournment, caucuses of both the late ministerial party and of the Opposition were held; at the one meeting Mr. Macdonald, and at the other Mr. Brown, explained what had been done during the late negotiations; and as these explanations were similar in substance, we shall confine ourselves to that made by Mr. Brown. He said that in a conversation with some of the supporters of the Administration, on the late crisis, he had urged the propriety of utilising the present crisis to settle for ever the difficulties existing between Upper and Lower Canada; and if the Government would take up manfully and sincerely the sectional difficulties, and adopt a basis that would be satisfactory to Upper Canada, he, and he believed almost the whole of his political friends, would retain them in office until they had a full opportunity of presenting their measure and testing it Parliament. In consequence of this, negotiations had been opened, and he was now enabled to lay before them the basis on which the Ministry were willing to arrange these difficulties. Nothing but the extreme difficulties of the case would have justified him in that course; but if the Ministry were sincerely desirous to deal with the these great sectional difficulties he would co-operate with them. He was extremely unwilling to enter the ministry.

After much discussion, the following basis had been arrived at: A federation of the two Provinces; the Government were to submit a Bill to Parliament, at its next session, for a division of Canada into two or more local Governments, to which should be committed all local and sectional questions, the whole to be presided over by a general Legislature, constituted on the principal of the American Federal Congress provision being made in the Bill for the reception hereafter of the Maritime Provinces and the North-west Territory into the Canadian system on satisfactory conditions.

When this was submitted to the meeting composed of nearly every member of the Upper Canada opposition, it was almost unanimously decided to adopt it as satisfactory. When the House met last evening the whole arrangement was to be laid before it, and we will be in a position in our next to give full details of the settlement arrived at and the probable results in so far as they will tend to the settlement of the great difficulties.

PUBLIC MEETING.

In accordance with the requisition presented to James Hall, Esq., Sheriff, the meeting to consider how best to further the settlement of the Townships in the rear of the County was held on Tuesday in the Town Hall here. Quite a number of gentlemen were present, among whom we might notice Col. Hamilton, Col. Strickland, P. Pearce, Esq., Warden of the County, P. M. Grover, Esq., and other members of the County Council. James Hall, Esq., was called to the Chair, and J. Edwards, Esq., was appointed Secretary. The Chairman called the meeting to order, and then stated briefly the object of the meeting and added that he strongly sympathised with the intentions of the holders of the meeting. He then called on P. Pearce, Esq., Warden, who stated briefly that the meeting originated with the members of the Grand Jury; that they thought that the settlement of the back townships was a matter of vital importance to the progress of the County, and that he hoped gentlemen present would give the subject the attention it deserved. Mr. Grover, Reeve of Asphodel, being called upon said, the subject before the meeting was one of vital importance, and that it was a pity that a larger number of the Town people were not present. That it was specially important to them, that whatever good might originate from the meeting would most certainly have a great influence on their prosperity. In view of this fact he had certainly hoped that a larger number of the people of the Town would have been present to take part in the proceedings. He spoke of the present system of limiting the timbered lands to lumbermen. Said he was wholly adverse to the system. The injury, he said, that this system produced to the poor settler was undeniable. It was the direct interest of the lumbermen to prevent the settlement of the country; that the County would never be prosperous till we were rid of them; that the lumbermen wasted the timber and perfectly disheartened the settler by the usage they gave him; that they took away the settler's timber and gave no adequate return; that instead of the present licensing system, he would advocate the sale of timbered lands to the lumbermen, and that they should be kept wholly off the hardwood lands. That under the present system they wasted more timber than they made use of, that the returns of the most honest of them could not be otherwise than false from the system under which the returns were made. That if they had to buy their lands like other people, and pay for them in proportion to their value they would be more careful and would waste less; that often they did not make use of one fifth of the timber, leaving the rest to rot on the ground; that if the lands were thus sold, and an export duty charged on the timber, the country would be greatly the benefitters.

That the emigration to our country from Europe mainly passed through to the States, very little of it remaining among us; and that the young men of Canada—the best and sinews of the country were leaving us by thousands; that it was a fact that hundreds of our smartest young men who had been drilled at our expense were fighting the battles of a foreign power. He himself had given over 200 certificates to parties who had left; that this emigration from our midst was mainly caused by the want of proper encouragement being held out to induce them to remain; that there were very valuable lands in the rear of our county that would afford splendid homes to these people if there were only roads made into them, but that nothing was being done to make them accessible. He urged on the meeting the necessity of making ready into these back townships, and that some understanding should be arrived at between the Council and the Government as to the amount to be voted to them to assist in their accessibility.

Col. Strickland proposed the second resolution:—That the city is deeply interested in the settlement of the back country. It would prove to be a great country. He came to Peterborough 40 years ago; at that time there was only one house where the town now stands. Look at it now: in 40 years more the whole back country would be as populous as the front townships were now. That already many hardy settlers were in these back townships; that he would advocate the opening of roads in the back townships—that was the main thing. He did not agree with Mr. Grover fully in his strictures on lumbermen. His idea was that good timbered lands should be kept for the lumbermen, good hardwood lands for the farmer; thought that the licensing system should be brought to an end; that it was a system of political favoritism that militated against the poor man, and that the main benefits of such a system were conferred on great influential timber monopolists, to the injury of men who were as deserving if they had less means. Did not care to see a large foreign immigration into the back townships—such a class were unfit for settling a new country; the proper men for such a purpose were the sons of hardy settlers who have been born in the country. Was not prepared to say whether the best way was to make free grants or not.

The Warden next, in an able address moved the first resolution, but, as from the press of other matter, it would be impossible for us to do justice to the facts before the meeting, we prefer to leave the balance of our report till next week.

The subject before the meeting was of the first importance, and it must surely have been from some misconception of the object of the meeting, that the Town of Peterboro' was so badly represented. The object of the meeting, as expressed in one of the resolutions, adopted was the construction of a road leading from the Town of Peterborough northward to Hall's Bridge; thence through Harvey to Cavendish to unite with a road which, it is expected, will be built by the government and the English Company to the Town of Haliburton in the Township of Dysart. It is plain from this that the Town of Peterborough, more especially of all the old settled parts of the county, will be likely to be advanced by the success of the meeting; and we say again it is a pity that its leading men did not see it was their interest to attend. The English Company, with its capital of over $1000000 must have an outlet for their produce somewhere, and it rests with the inhabitants of the County of Peterborough whether they shall be the parties to benefit by this trade, or if it all shall be diverted from us and find an outlet by Lindsay.

In our next we will give a report of the rest of the proceedings at the meeting, together with some information on the subject of the new English Company, who have bought nine whole townships in our rear, and are at present opening them out and settling them. Information kindly promised us by Messrs. Hyles and Stewart the agents for that Company.

Owing to the pressure on our space a number of communications and other matter have been laid over; they will receive attention in our next.

The Cobourg Star says that a shower of small fish fell during a thunder storm in that neighborhood last week.

Owing to pressure on our space a number of communications and other matters have been laid over. They will receive attention in our next.

The sale of the Dover mead property takes place to-day. There is to be no postponement this time, parties interested would do well to take notice.

Dogs.—Surely these are dog days. Would it not be well that something were done to keep down the number of useless curs that growl around the streets. The Corporations all around us have moved in the matter. Will our Mayor see to it here.

A Card.—The Rev. J. Carroll desires to inform the members of his late flock in town and country, that he hopes, with the blessing of God, to be able to address to them a parting discourse in the church, on Sabbath evening next, the 27th, at 6 o'clock.

We beg to call attention to Messrs. Patterson & Co's Boot and Shoe advertisement. Mr. Patterson has been a long time in the trade, and we have often heard it remarked that their work gave every satisfaction, was well and neatly made, and what is not too common was made to wear more than sell. Give them a call.

We regret to notice the death of Mrs. Roger. We are sure we are speaking the mind of the community at large, when we say we deeply sympathise with the Rev. Mr. Roger and family in this, their painful bereavement. He has lost a devoted partner; his family a loving mother. Mrs. Roger was much and deservedly respected, and will be mourned by a large circle of sorrowing friends.

The Public Examinations of the Peterborough Grammar and Union School will commence on Wednesday, 22nd inst. The Primary Departments will be examined on the 22nd. The examinations of the higher departments will be held on the 23rd and 24th, commencing punctually each day at 9 o'clock. The parents of the pupils and all feel and take a deep interest in the cause of education are requested to attend.

Young Lad Drowned.—We regret to have to state that one of the young men employed in our office, named Andrew Statt, was drowned on the evening of Saturday last. It seems he had been bathing near the Little Lake, and having got beyond his depth and into the current, was swept off. A young man named Fox made some heroic efforts to rescue him, but was unsuccessful. We cordially sympathise with his widowed and sorrowing mother.

The Opening of the Back Country.—We are glad to know that the Committee appointed at the public meeting held to close up time in commencing the work assigned to them, and that they are to meet this P. M. at 4-o'clock in the Town Hall. A meeting of the Town Council has also been called, which is to take place at 7½ o'clock, and will we trust eventuate in something being done at once.

THE COUNTY COUNCIL.

The County Council are now in Session. Wishing to call particular attention to the [illegible] improvements that are being completed on the Court House Park.

THE WARDEN'S ADDRESS.

Gentlemen,

In meeting you again at this the most important session of the Municipal year, it affords me much pleasure in being able to congratulate you on the general progress of the work assigned by you at your last meeting, to the several Committees.

The grounds and fence around the Court House are nearly completed, the Town Council having kindly granted another $100 towards its completion. You will observe that some improvements are being made in the Council Chamber, and adjoining rooms completed by the Clerk and Treasurer, together with an entrance for the Jailor at the south end of the Court House. The necessity for making these improvements was brought under the notice of the gentlemen composing the Jail and Court House Grounds Committee, and on their advice the work was ordered to be done in time for the present session of Council. I hope all these improvements will meet with your approval.

The new Jail is rapidly progressing, and from the energy already manifested by the Contractor, I have no doubt that the whole work will be completed within the time agreed upon.

The equalising of the Assessment Rolls, will at this time form a part of the duties of the present session. This is a matter of the greatest importance, and will no doubt receive your serious attention. After the pains taken by your Clerk in preparing a sheet at the end of the Assessment Rolls, for the recapitulation required to be made by the several Township Clerks, previous to their return of the Rolls, there should be less trouble in comparing them than has been heretofore.

The state of the Boundary Roads in the County are such that it will require a considerable amount of money to put them in a proper state of repair, the travel on some portions of them being so great that it is impossible with statute labor to keep them in repair. While on this subject, I may state that a Communication has been received from the Warden of Victoria, calling my attention to the dangerous state of the North Bridge, at Bobcaygeon, and proposing to erect a new Bridge at the joint expense of the Counties. Also a letter from the late Reeve of Monaghan, stating that the fifty dollars he had been authorised to expend on the boundary between Cavan and Monaghan has not yet been laid out, and requesting that Mr. Wm. Fowler, Sen., be appointed by you to expend the same. I would recommend that both of these applications be complied with.

I am pleased to be able to inform you that the Council of the County of Hastings has expended sum of money in improving the road leading from the eastern part of this County to Marmora Village; this will open a direct route from Peterboro' to Belleville. The Warden of that County has, at my request, directed thirty dollars to be expended in repairing the north part of the Bridge over Deer River, on the boundary between Marmora and Belmont.

The Deputy Reeve of Smith wrote to me some time since, inspecting the state of the Bridge at Lakefield. I requested him to get it properly secured at once. I might also state that the rails has been removed from the bridge at Nassau Mills. This bridge is in a bad state of repair, and should be attended to at once.

Mr. Clements has furnished me with a report of the resurvey of Harvey, from which it appears he had on the 18th day of May last completed the survey of 65,000 acres. Also a letter from the Assistant Commissioner of Crown Lands showing the amount Mr. Clementi is entitled to receive on account of the work performed. It is satisfactory to find from the said report that sixty per cent of the lands surveyed is suitable for settlement.—No report has been received from the gentleman employed to resurvey Burleigh.

From a letter received from the Government Agent on the Burleigh road, I find that on the 28th of April last, there were 10,779 acres of land sold in four townships along that road to 86 actual settlers, and from information obtained by the agent from parties who had inspected the lands before purchasing. We have doubtless in the rear part of this County a very large portion of the best lands for agricultural purposes, yet remaining in the possession of the Crown in this Province. I have endeavored to impress this fact upon the Government Emigration Agents, and requested the agent at Kingston to bring it prominently before emigrants on their arrival, which he has kindly consented to do; and I hope you will be prepared to assist the government in opening up that section of the Country by every means in your power. I have no doubt but that if proper measures are adopted to encourage the settlement of our wild lands before the time will arrive for taking the next census, our population will be doubled.

A petition from the Warden and Council of York and Peel, praying for an alteration in the present jury law, will be laid before you. This is a matter that deserves your serious consideration, as it proposes to reduce very largely the expenses attending the selection and summoning of jurors.

A letter from Dr. Morris will be submitted to you. From it I learn that it is the intention of the government to make provision for the education of the deaf, dumb and blind.—Also that the boy Broderick is progressing satisfactorily in his education.

According to your direction I sent the unfortunate man Kelly, that had his feet so badly frozen, to the General Hospital, Toronto. A bill of the expenses, together with the correspondence on the subject, will be laid before you.

With regard to the joint application made by you and the Council of the town, asking for aid to erect a Drill Shed and Armoury in the town of Peterborough, I regret to learn that the Government have no funds at their disposal at present for such purpose.

With reference to the other application for aid to open a road into the interior, no answer has yet been received. I have solicited the assistance of the Hon. Billa Flint, and W. S. Conger, Esq., M. P. P., in this matter, and both these gentlemen have assured me they will render all the assistance in their power to aid us in the above matter.

I have also much pleasure in submitting for your approval a Memorial to the Government, relating to the culture of flax, together with a letter from John A. Donaldson, Esq., on the same subject. Should you approve of its object, you will no doubt pass the same. This is a subject at present engaging the attention of County Councils in other parts of the Province, and I hope it will receive that attention from you its importance demands.

By referring to a copy of Municipal Returns for the past year, furnished by John Langton, Esq., Auditor, it shows that the number of acres assessed in this County for 1863 is not down as 434,864 acres, at a value of $3,942,871, the number of ratepayers assessed in the County are 4,166. Our Debentures debt is the lowest reported. We are also the lowest in the list of those having other liabilities. In view of our present favourable financial position, I would most respectfully submit the desirableness of raising a sufficient amount of funds to enable us to place our leading roads in a good state of repair, believing that the advantages of good roads tend largely to induce settlers to come among us.

The joint Committee appointed by you and the County of Victoria, to finally settle any dispute that might exist in reference to the settlement made between the County of [illegible] at Peterboro' [illegible] last, are [illegible] carefully examine the accounts for the years 1862, 1863, and 1864, and report thereon at this session. The Treasurer of the County of Victoria has been notified of the appointment of the Committee on the part of this County, and I have no doubt but that the Committee will be prepared to report at this session. The Report of the Committee has been received in the Council of Victoria.

A statement of the Assets and Liabilities of the County will be laid before you. It will be necessary to obtain some to fill some vacancies in the Boards of Grammar School Trustees, in consequence of some gentlemen removing from the County. Also, to nominate, a local Superintendent of Schools.

I cannot close this address without acknowledging the valuable assistance I have received from our respected Clerk and Treasurer, in attending to the various matters brought under my notice connected with the business of the County.

PETER PEARCE,
Warden.

Council Chamber, 21st June, 1864.

A party of visitors were stopping after the recent Derby there in one of those vans, when a lighted cigar fell among the loose straw at the bottom of the vehicle, and a blaze sprung up, setting fire to the curtains and awnings quickly. Some tarpaulins of the party were fastily burned before they could get out.

The County Court and General Quarter Sessions held its regular sitting last week. There was not very much business of general interest to transact. Five Bills were found against Eliza Middleton for Larceny. Wesley Morrow was fined $10, and ordered to be kept in custody until paid. Jas. Wrighton was fined $1. Eliza Middleton was sentenced to the Provincial Penetentiary for two years. The civil docket was very light.—Review.

....The father of R. B. Sheridan who was a stage manager, loaned the beautiful but penniless Miss Gunning stage dresses of "Lady Macbeth" and "Juliet," in which they were introduced at Court. Very soon after this a most diabolical scheme was formed by some unprincipled young men; they invited Mrs. Gunning and her two daughters to dinner, and infused strong narcotics in the wine, intending to take advantage of the intoxication which must ensue to carry off the two young women. Fortunately Sheridan discovered their base designs, and arrived just in time to rescue the ladies. Sheridan lived to see one of these girls Duchess of Argyle, and the other Countess of Coventry; and, it is melancholy to add, lived to see his application for admission to their parties rejected.

....It is announced that the century number of the Quebec Gazette will be published on the 21st inst., on which day newspapers will have been known in Canada for a hundred years. This number is to contain papers on the origin, struggles, persecutions, and final establishment of the newspaper Press; the establishment of the Quebec Gazette, with a view of the social, commercial, and political state of the Province at that time, as shown by extracts from its columns; brief narrative of the political events within the Province since then; notices of a few of the principal Canadian newspapers; an illustrated supplement, containing views of the city, and principal buildings and places of interest; an exact facsimile of the issue of the Gazette, which was not only the first Canadian newspaper, but is the oldest living newspaper in British North America.

....The Goderich Signal learns that on Saturday, the 8th inst., in the north-west corner of Howick township, a man by the name of Wm. Shearer and his father-in-law had some words, and Shearer being a very powerful and uncontrollably passionate man, told the father-in-law he would give him ten minutes to think before he cut his throat, holding in his hand at the same time a razor that had been fixed in an immovable handle and sharpened. The old man Sharp stood by a corner not more than six feet from Shearer, who sat on the edge of the bench watching his victim. Shearer's loaded gun hung in reach of the old man, who, in his despair, seized it and instantly fired it at Shearer. The charge, consisting of a ball and two buckshot, entered his mouth tearing away several upper double teeth and making its exit by two apertures, breaking the back portions of the lower jaw. He lies in a very precarious condition, and it is quite uncertain if he recover. The old man gave himself up immediately to a magistrate.

Runaway on Hunter-street.—A cutter is the cart to think only of the runaways of the day in making a subject. If he wants a subject in brief, he selects a third-class vessel; if runaway, a quadruped-looking cutter, and so on, never contemplating the possibility of the child to look at being a child in reality, and the murderous cutter to be really what he looks. M. Allard, a distinguished painter of Lyons, has recently been murdered in his studio by a "mother" he had chosen to represent Judas giving the kiss to our Saviour. The murderer was arrested at Civita Vechia.

CARD.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

I HAVE taken the liberty through your valuable paper, to thank the Directors of the Royal Insurance Company, for the prompt and satisfactory payment of my claim for the destruction of my dwelling by fire, on the morning of the 28th of April last, amounting to five hundred dollars. Immediately after giving the Agent, A. Smith Esq. notice, notwithstanding the badness of the roads, he made and made the necessary survey and enquiry concerning the fire, and in a few days the money was forthcoming.

I am confident in saying that all persons insured in the Royal will be fairly, honestly and punctually dealt with.

Yours with respect,
WILLIAM WEIR.

Poetry.

COMING HOME.

A SONG OF THE WAR.

They are coming home, coming home,
Brother and lover, father and son;
Friend and foe—they are coming home
To rest, for their work is done.

They come from the hospital, picket and field,
From iron heat and fevering fire,
In silent companies, slowly wheeled,
In the rythm of deathful thought.

This was a father of wrinkle and woe,
Gray-haired but hale, and strong of limb;
The bayonet flashed and flashed again,
And the old man's eyes grew dim.

Here was a form of manly grace;
The bomb-shell groaning through the air,
Drenched with his blood a pictured face,
And a curl of silken hair.

This was a bright-eyed, venturesome boy;
Back from the perilous picket-ground
They bore him, waked from his dream of joy,
To—gently, fatal wound.

And there for three days lingering,
He talked in wandering, rapid speech,
Of mother and home and the cooling spring
His lips could almost reach.

They are coming home, but not as they went,
With the flying flag and stirring band;
With the tender word and message sent
From—the distant waving hand.

MODERN GIRLS.

Ever rigging, constantly changing,
Sometimes tossing, sometimes plunging,
Sometimes boating, sometimes coaxing,
No expressing, how much dressing.
Little knowing, Flats staying,
Little walking, get / talking,
Mischief making, promise breaking,
Idle dreaming, sudden screaming,
Lap-dog doating, Byron quoting,
Piano playing, game displaying,
Body tracing, tightly lacing,
Over sleeping, often weeping,
Dandy loving, white kid gloving,
Thin shoe wearing, health despairing,
Daily fretting, sickness getting,
Even sighing, almost dying;
What blessed wives to sheer men's lives

Who Will be Boss.

Once on a time, not long ago nor so far from Millersburg as it might be, a good hearted man, and his long-tongued, style-talking wife attended a social party. About every three minutes the wife would check her husband thus:—

"Now, William, don't talk so loud!"

"Come, William, don't lean back in the chair that way."

"Say, William, let the girls alone and sit by me."

At last forbearance ceased to be a virtue, and the husband, who was really pitied by all as the mean, arose and said—

"I beg pardon of the company, but as my wife insists on being boss ALL THE TIME, it is right she should have these.

And he deliberately took off his pants and handed them to her, and sat down in his boots and drawers.

The company were astonished—the women burst into tears—the happy couple soon went home, but neither of them wore the pants.

How the affair was settled we cannot tell, but the last time we saw William he had the pants on. We are inclined to think she will not again boss him in company in a hurry.

Some time since a man in Maine wanted to exhibit an Egyptian mummy, and went to the Court House to obtain a license. "What is it?" asked the Judge. "An Egyptian mummy, may it please the Court, more than three thousand years old," said the showman. "Three thousand years old!" exclaimed the Judge, jumping to his feet, "and is the critter alive?"

Sir,—I am short enough to state that my wife used Henry's Vermont Liniment, having accidentally got a needle run under her finger nail. The pain was most frightful; but by using the Liniment, the pain was gone in a few minutes.

An Old Physician's Testimony.

READ:

Waterbury, Vt.,
Nov. 24th, 1863.

Although I do not like the practice of Physicians recommending indiscriminately the patent medicines of the day; yet after a trial of ten years, I am free to admit that there is one medicine before the public that any Physician can use in his practice, and recommend to the public with perfect confidence; that medicine is Rev. N. H. Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

I have used it myself with the very best success, and now, whenever I am troubled with a Cough or Cold, I invariably use it. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are suffering from a Cold or a Cough, for the Croup, Whooping Cough, and all diseases tending to consumption, and to the Profession as a reliable article.

Should always keep this Family Physician at hand; and by its timely use save hundreds of dollars that would otherwise be swallowed up in discharging doctor's fees.

This old, time-tried, standard remedy still maintains its popularity. When all others have proved ineffectual, the Elixir alone continues to give satisfaction.—Use it for

Incipient Consumption and all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs.

Thirty years ago the Elixir first made its appearance; and even then, in its primitive and imperfect state, produced such extraordinary results that it became, at once, a general favourite. Many have made it, what it really is, a Family Medicine.

For more than half the diseases to which flesh is heir," originate from colds, so this may be considered the general prevention of all diseases, by removing the primeval cause.

TANNER'S
GERMAN OINTMENT!
Cor. Hunter & Water Streets, Peterboro.

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,
Your German Ointment I have used in my family for a long time, and find it to be a very good article for Bad Eyes. I was ordered on one occasion that I was compelled to have my eyelids cut for a short time, my eyes began to grow stronger and got better. I can now go about my business as well as any person.
Respectfully yours,
Rev. Mathias W. Shum.
Gold Water, Mich., Sept. 14, 1863.

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,
If a person breaks his shin the doctor outlines most to get cured by any Ointment; but for a family Ointment, this is regarding, in our way of thinking, Tanner, the Ointment for the people. It is an old proverb, but very true, that "old is best," and this proverb for over forty years. At the present time, there are millions of kind, would prove yours, for using a great many kinds, and the last company employed to put it up. The Ointment does not contain any ingredient injurious to either man or beast.

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,
I was in the summer of 1862 afflicted with the rheumatism. I was unable to use two arms. I used your Tanner's German Ointment, as you directed for about three weeks, when I began to get better. I am now able to walk without any cane and consider myself cured. I would heartily recommend your Ointment to the public as a good remedy for the rheumatism.
Yours very truly,
Rev. Orrin Vorhase.

Mr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,
Your letter of 21st inst. is received, asking the if I were cured of the pile by the use of your Ointment. When you first recommended to me your German Ointment for the piles, I had little or no faith in it. I used it for two weeks. I still had pile-tumor. I then had at that time, I was compelled to keep my bed. I have no hesitancy in giving you my letter for publication as I think every body afflicted ought to try it.
Very respectfully,
Rev. Thos. Cone.
Branch County, Michigan,

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,
I have used your German Ointment for chilblains and think it the best remedy I ever saw.
Respectfully yours,
Rev. Mathias Mercer.

Select Poetry.

MY CHILDHOOD'S HOME.

BY THE JAMES HACKEY.

From the densely crowded cities,
From the busy haunts of men,
Oft my thoughts turn backward sadly
To the solitary glen—
To the wild romantic valley,
Where the falling waters foam—
To the woodlands, to the prairies,
To my childhood's lonely home.

Well I loved thee, yet I panted,
Longing ever more to flee
From thy portals, home of childhood,
Deeming there I was not free.
Then the world seemed fair before me,
Nothing bitter with the sweet,
For it then was veiled in shadow,
And I saw not its deceit.

But the shadows fled full early,
And the world's cold glance I met,
And my heart was filled forever
With the sorrow of regret.
But alas! how vain regretting!
For my feet henceforth must roam;
Never more may wake the echoes,
In the quiet hall of home!

RESULT OF THE NEGOTIATIONS.

THE RECORD OF THE DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT AND MR. BROWN.

DEBATE UPON THE EXPLANATIONS.

QUEBEC, June 22.

The speaker took the chair at 4 o'clock.

Attorney-General Macdonald then said that, on behalf of himself and his colleagues, he desired to lay before the House a full statement of the negotiations which, as the House was well aware, had been going on ever since the defeat of the government on Tuesday week. To avoid misconception or mistake, a record of the proceedings, day by day, had been carefully prepared. This he proceeded to read as follows:—

"Immediately after the defeat of the Government, on Tuesday night, the 14th, and on the following morning, Mr. Brown spoke to several supporters of the Administration, strongly urging that the present crisis should be utilized in settling for ever the Constitutional difficulties between Upper and Lower Canada, and assuring them that he was prepared to co-operate with the existing or any other Administration that would deal with this question promptly and firmly, with a view to a final settlement. Messrs Morris and Pope waited and obtained leave to communicate these conversations to Mr. John A. Macdonald and Mr. Galt. On Thursday at 3 p. m., just before the speaker took the chair, Mr. J. A. Macdonald said to Mr. Brown, while standing in the centre of the Assembly-room, that he had been informed of what he (Mr. Brown) had stated, and he wished to know if Mr. Brown had any objection to meet Mr. Galt and discuss the matter. He replied, "certainly not." Mr. Morris accordingly arranged an interview with Mr. Brown; and on Friday, the 17th of June, about one p. m., Messrs. Macdonald and Galt called on Mr. Brown at the St. Louis Hotel. Mr. Brown stated that nothing but the extreme urgency of the present crisis, and the hope of settling the sectional troubles of the Province forever, could in his opinion justify their meeting together with a view to common political action. Messrs. Macdonald and Galt were equally impressed with this, and stated that on that footing alone the present meeting had been invited. Mr. Brown asked in what position these gentlemen came to him, whether as deputed by the Administration, or simply as leading members of the Ministerial party. They replied that they were charged by their colleagues formally to invite his aid in strengthening the Administration, with a view to the settlement of the sectional difficulties of Upper and Lower Canada. Mr. Brown then stated that, on grounds purely personal, it was impossible that he could be a member of any Administration at present; and that even had this been otherwise he would have considered it highly objectionable that parties who had been so long and so strongly opposed to each other, as he and some members of the Administration had been, should enter the same Cabinet. He thought the public mind would be shocked by such an arrangement, but he felt very strongly that the present crisis presented an opportunity of dealing with this question that might never occur again. Both political parties had tried in turn to Govern the country, but without success, and political elections only arrayed sectional majorities against each other more strongly than before. Another General election at this moment presented little hope of a much altered result; and he believed that both parties were much better prepared than they had ever been before to look the true cause of all the difficulty fairly in the face, and endeavour to settle the representation question on an equitable and permanent basis. Mr. Brown added that if the Administration were prepared to do this, and would pledge themselves, clearly and publicly, to bring in measures next session that would be acceptable to Upper Canada, the basis to be now settled and sanctioned by Parliament, he would heartily co-operate with them, and try to induce his friends in which he hoped to be successful—to sustain them until they had an opportunity of presenting their measure next session. Mr. Macdonald replied that he considered it would be essential that Mr. Brown himself should become a member of the Cabinet, with a view to giving a guarantee to the Opposition and to the country for the correctness of the Government. Mr. Brown rejoined that other members of the Opposition could equally with himself give that guarantee to their party and the country, by entering the Government in the event of a satisfactory basis being arrived at. He felt that his position had been such for many years as to place a greater bar in the way of his entering the Government than in that of any other member of the opposition. Mr. Macdonald then said that he thought it would be necessary that Mr. Brown himself should in any case be identified with the negotiation that would have to take place, and that if he did not himself enter the Cabinet, he might undertake a mission to the Lower Provinces or to England, or both, in order to identify himself with the action of the Canadian Government in carrying out the measures agreed upon. It was then suggested by Mr. Brown and agreed to, that all questions of a personal character and the machinery generally should be waived for the present, and the discussion conducted with the view of ascertaining if a satisfactory solution of the sectional difficulty could be agreed upon. Mr. Brown asked what the Government proposed as a remedy for the injustice complained of by Upper Canada as to a settlement of the sectional trouble. Mr. Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Galt replied, that their remedy was a Federal union of all the British North American Provinces—local matters being committed to local bodies, and matters common to all to a general Legislature, constituted on the well understood principles of a federal Government. Mr. Brown rejoined, that this would not be acceptable to the people of Upper Canada as a remedy for existing evils; that he believed the Federation of all the Provinces ought to come, and would come about ere long, but it had not yet been thoroughly considered by the people, and that even were this otherwise, there were so many parties to be consulted, that its adoption was uncertain. Mr. Brown was then asked about his remedy, when he stated that the measure acceptable to Upper Canada would be Parliamentary Reform based on population, without regard to a separating line between Upper and Lower Canada. To this both Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Galt stated that it was impossible for them to accede, or for any Government to carry such a measure, and that unless a basis could be found in the federation principle suggested in the report of Mr. Brown's committee, it did not appear to them likely that anything could be settled. After much discussion on both sides, it was found that a compromise might probably be had in the adoption of the Federal principle, either for all the British North American provinces, as the larger question; or for Canada alone, with provision for the admission of the Maritime Provinces and the North-west territory when they should express the desire. Mr. Brown considered that the Canadian Federation should be constituted first in order that such action might be taken in regard to the position of Upper Canada as would satisfy that portion of the country that in the negotiations with the Lower Provinces the interests of Upper Canada would in no case be overlooked. [illegible] caucus, but as the hour for the meeting of the House had nearly arrived, an understanding was come to that the negotiations were such as to warrant the hope of an ultimate understanding, and it was agreed that the fact should be communicated to Parliament and an adjournment until Monday asked for. On Friday evening Mr. Galt saw Mr. Brown, and arranged for an interview next morning, at which Sir E. P. Tache and Mr. Cartier should be present. On Saturday, at 10 a. m., other engagements requiring a change in the hour appointed Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Galt called on Mr. Brown, and after further discussion, a second appointment was made for 1 p. m., when the gentlemen named, for 1 p. m., when the gentlemen named, for 1 p. m., when the gentlemen named, with Mr. Cartier, met in the Provincial Secretary's room, Sir E. P. Tache being out of town. The consideration of the steps most advisable for the final settlement of the sectional difficulties were then entered upon fully, and a general accord seemed to exist that, as the views of Upper Canada could not be met under our present system, the remedy must be sought in the adoption of the Federal principle. Mr. Brown then requested to have the views of his colleagues reduced to writing, for the purpose of being submitted confidentially to his friends. The following memorandum was then proposed, and having to be submitted to the Cabinet and to the Governor General, Mr. Brown enquired whether any objection existed to his seeing His Excellency, whereupon he was informed that no objection whatever existed. Mr. Brown accordingly waited on the Governor General, and, on his return, the memorandum approved by Council read by the Governor General was handed to him, and another interview appointed at 6 p. m., Mr. Brown stating that he did not feel at liberty to accept or reject the proposition without consulting with his friends:—"Confidential memorandum.—The Government are prepared to state that immediately after the prorogation, they will address themselves to the most earnest manner to the negotiation for a Confederation of all the British North American Provinces, and that, awaiting a successful issue to such negotiations, they are prepared to pledge themselves to legislation, during the next session of Parliament, for the purpose of remedying difficulties by introducing the federal principles to Canada alone, coupled with such provisions as will permit the Maritime Provinces and the Northwest territory to be hereafter incorporated into the Canadian system. That for the purpose of carrying on the negotiations and settling the details of the proposed legislation, a Royal commission shall be issued to be composed of three members of the Government and three members of the Opposition, of whom Mr. Brown shall be one; that the Government pledge themselves to give all the influence of the Administration to secure the said commission the means of advancing the great object in view. That, subject to the House permitting the Government to carry through the public business, no dissolution shall take place, but the Administration will again meet the present House." Shortly after 6 p. m. the same parties met at the same place, when Mr. Brown stated that without recommending the contents of the confidential paper entrusted to him, he had come to sufficient number of his friends to warrant him in expressing his belief that the basis of his [illegible] friends would, as a compromise, accept a measure for the federal union of Canada, with provision for the admission of the Maritime Provinces and North-west territory. To this it was replied that the Administration could not consent to waive the larger question. But, after carefully considering the document, an amendment to the original proposal was agreed to in the following terms subject to the approval, on Monday, of the Cabinet and His Excellency:—"The Government are prepared to pledge themselves to introduce or support measures, for the purpose of removing any difficulties, by introducing the federal principle into Canada, coupled with such provision as will permit the Maritime Provinces and the North-west territory to be incorporated into the same system of government. And the government will seek, by sending representatives to the Lower Provinces and to England, to secure the assent of those interests which lie beyond the control of our own Legislature, to such measures as will enable all British North America to be united under a general legislature, based upon federal principles." Mr. Brown then stated, that having assisted at a home which he believed would be generally acceptable to the great mass of his political friends, he had to add, that all the proposition was too general in its terms, and the advantage of the measure depended so entirely on the details that might finally be adopted, it was the very general feeling of his friends that security must be given for the fairness of these details, and the good faith with which the whole movement should be pro ounted, by the introduction into the Cabinet of a fair representation of his political friends. Mr. Brown stated that he had not put this question directly to his friends, but that he perceived very clearly that this was the strong opinion of a large majority of them, and that his own personal opinion on this point, to which he still adhered, was particularly unexpected in by only a small number. Messrs. Macdonald, Cartier, and Galt replied that they had, of course, understood, in proposing that Mr. Brown should enter the Government, that he would not come alone, but that the number of seats at his disposal had not been considered by their colleagues. Mr. Brown was requested to state his views on this point, and he replied that the Opposition were half the House, and ought to have an equal influence in the Government. Messrs Macdonald, Cartier, and Galt said this was impossible, but they would see their colleagues and state their views on Monday. Messrs. Macdonald, Cartier, and Galt called on Mr. Brown, at the St. [illegible] E. P. Tache had returned to town, Mr. Brown accompanied them to the Provincial Secretary's room, when Mr. Brown having been asked to explain how he proposed to arrange equal representation in the Cabinet, replied that he desired to be understood as meaning four members for Upper Canada and two for Lower Canada, to be chosen by the Opposition. In reply Messrs Cartier and Galt stated that as far as related to the constitution of the Cabinet for Lower Canada, they believed it already afforded ample guarantee for their sincerity; that a change in its personnel would be more likely to produce embarrassment than assistance, as the majority of the people of Lower Canada, both French Canadians and English, had implicit confidence in their leaders, which it would not be desirable to shake in any way; and that in approaching the important question of settling the sectional difficulties, it appeared to them essential that the party led by Sir E. P. Tache should have ample assurance that their interests would be protected, which was feared would not be strengthened by the introduction into the Cabinet of the Lower Canada Opposition. Mr. Macdonald stated that as regarded Upper Canada, in his opinion the reduction to two of the 6 gentlemen in the Cabinet who now represented Upper Canada would involve the withdrawal of the confidence of those who now support them in the House of Assembly, but he would be prepared for the admission into the Cabinet of three gentlemen of the Opposition, on its being ascertained that they would bring with them a support equal to that now enjoyed by the Government from Upper Canada. Mr. Brown asked in what manner it was proposed the six Upper Canada Ministers should be selected—was each party to have carte blanche in suggestion to the head of the Government the names to be chosen? To which Mr. Macdonald replied, that as a matter of course he would expect Mr. Brown to be himself a member of the Administration, as affording the best, if not the only guarantee for the adhesion of his friends; and that Mr. Macdonald, on Mr. Brown giving his consent, would confer with him as to the selection of Upper Canada colleagues from both sides who should be the most acceptable to their respective friends, and most likely to work harmoniously for the great object which alone could justify this arrangement proposed. Mr Brown then enquired what Mr. Macdonald proposed in regard to the Upper Canada leadership. Mr. Macdonald said that, as far as he was concerned he could act with propriety, or without diminishing his usefulness, after his position; but that he was, as he had been for some time, anxious to retire from the Government, and would be quite ready to facilitate arrangements by doing so. Of course he could not retire from the Government without Sir E. P. Tache's consent. Mr. Brown then stated that without discussing the propriety or reasonableness of the proposition, he would consult his friends and give an early reply. On Tuesday the respective parties being occupied during the forenoon in consulting their friends, a meeting was held at 2 p. m., at which there were present Sir E. P. Tache, Mr. Macdonald, Mr. Cartier, Mr. Galt and Mr. Brown. Mr. Brown stated that his friends had a meeting, and approved of the course he had pursued and the basis arrived at, and authorized him to continue the negotiations. Messrs. Macdonald and Cartier also said that they had received satisfactory responses from their friends. Mr. Brown then stated that it was now for him to consider what course he should pursue, entertaining, as he still did, the strong [illegible] engagements in accepting office. A further meeting was appointed for half-past eight p. m. at which the details of the arrangement, in case Mr. Brown and his friends accepted office, were commenced to be discussed. Mr. Brown contended strongly that the Government should concede a larger representation in the Cabinet than three members, to which it was replied that the Administration believed it was quite impossible to satisfy their own friends with a different arrangement. Mr. Brown then asked if he could be sworn in as an Executive Councillor without a Department or office. In addition to the three Departmental offices to be filled by the friends. Mr. Macdonald replied that the principle of equality would in this case be departed, and he was confident it could not be done. Mr. Brown asked whether it was a sine qua non that he should himself enter the Cabinet to which it was replied that, to secure a successful issue to the attempt at the settlement of the sectional difficulties, it was considered that Mr. Brown's acceptance of office was indispensable. A meeting was then appointed for the following day. On Wednesday, a little after one o'clock the same parties met, when Mr. Brown stated to his final decision that he would consent to the reconstruction of the Cabinet as proposed; but, inasmuch as he did not wish to assume the responsibility of the Government business before the House, he proposed leaving till after the prorogation the consideration of the acceptance of offices by himself and the two gentlemen who might be selected to enter the Administration with him. Sir E. P. Tache and Mr. Macdonald thereupon stated that after the prorogation they would be prepared to place the three seats in the Cabinet at the disposal of Mr. Brown.

Attorney-Gen. Cartier then read a French version of the above document.

Mr. Holton wished to know what was meant by the expression, "according to the well understood principles of a Federal Government?" Was it meant that, in a Federal Legislature there should be representation according to numbers?

M. Cartier said the hon. gentleman knew quite well what was meant by the principles of a federal government, and so did his colleague (M. Dorion), who had several times moved resolutions in favor of [illegible] been arranged; but he considered the principle of federation involved equality in one branch, and that both population and territory should be taken into account in the other branch.

M. Dorion thought that, with reference to the changes which were of the highest importance, and in a crisis like this, which was second to none since the union of the Canadas, as to the results portended by it, everything which had been agreed upon should be fully stated. Was the House to understand that, as in the United States, there was to be equality in one branch and representation according to population in the others.

Mr. J. A. Macdonald—Yes. (Cheers.)

M. Dorion said that, according to the explanations of the Attorney General East, in one branch there would be equality of representation and in the other representation proportionate to population and territory.

M. Cartier said he had merely stated his opinion of what was involved in the federal principle.

M. Dorion said he had not asked the opinion of the Attorney General East, but wished to know what had been decided on by the Government. According to the Attorney General East's explanation Lower Canada, having a smaller population but a larger territory than Upper Canada, would have an equal representation.

Mr. GAY—No, no.

Mr. John A. Macdonald said M. Dorion surely did not need to be informed what "the well understood principles of a federal government" were. They were exemplified on this continent, and included in the lower branch of the Legislature representation based upon population. (Loud cheers.) The Attorney General East, however, had properly guarded himself, for he and the member for South Oxford and himself (Mr. John A. Macdonald) were all equally opposed to the exercise of representation by population entered on an equivalent to universal suffrage.

Mr. Brown—(Hear, hear.)

Mr. John A. Macdonald continued to say that in the lower branch of the general Legislature there would be representation based on population with the necessary checks required by the interest of property as provided under the present constitution of this House, where we had representation not according to population, but according to certain rights and territorial divisions.

Some other questions were put by M. Dorion and Mr. Holton, as to whether a federation of all the Provinces or of Canada alone would be pronounced first; the division of powers between the general and local Legislatures, which elicited from Mr. John A. Macdonald and Mr. Galt the information that the Government intended to be represented at the approaching convention at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, with a view to promoting the federation of all the Provinces; that a measure for the federation of the Canadas would be positively submitted next session, if the other object could not be attained in the meantime; that the precise division of the powers reserved for the Common or Sovereign Legislature and those of the Local or restricted Legislatures had not yet been settled, and all such details would have to be most maturely carefully considered before a measure would be submitted to the Legislature at its next session.

M. Dorion asked whether the Intercolonial railway was a portion of the scheme?

Mr. John A. Macdonald said the subject of the Intercolonial railway was not [illegible] mentioned during the negotiations. The subject under discussion was the consideration of a railway, between [illegible] and Canada.

Mr. Brown then rose, evidently labouring under deep emotion which he endeavoured to suppress. He addressed the Chair, but his voice was inaudible in the reporters' gallery. He said he had come from the Metropolis of the Province, [illegible] position. Last session, I stood [illegible] ing hon. gentlemen, Mr. Holton [illegible] opposed [illegible] him, [illegible] to the [illegible] ministry, [illegible] the [illegible] attempt [illegible] was [illegible] ministry [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE NEW POLICY.

No apology, we hope, will be required for the unusual space we have devoted to politics in this week's issue. The importance of the things that are taking place in our Councils make it a matter of necessity that every elector in Canada should fairly understand, and thoroughly weigh, those questions of their birthright. In furnishing our share of the crisis and its effects in our time, frequently mentioned the heads of the which the Government intended the Ministry and the Public. Since that time the matter has been pretty well ventilated in the House, and all the details known of the agreement till now known.

At will be seen from the very full report of the speeches of Mr. Mowat and Mr. Brown, the Ministry are to continue as they are constituted during the present Session. After the prorogation of Parliament three of the Upper Canada ministers will be called upon to resign. Mr. Brown and two members of the present Opposition will be called to their places; the Ministry, as then constituted, will prepare for the approval of Parliament, at its next Session, a new Constitution on the Federal principle. There are to be two or more Local Legislatures for Canada; these are to preside over local matters, and will be chosen on the basis of Representation by Population, with such checks and modifications as regards property as obtain in reference to the House at present. Beside these Local Legislatures, we are to have a general Legislature, composed of the Upper and Lower Houses; in the Upper House the representation is to be on the same footing of equality as prevails in that House at present; the Lower House is to be chosen on the basis of representation according to Population, and really to consist of the two Local Legislatures. The details of the measure are all to be worked out before the coming Session, and it would be altogether premature to speculate on the effect this measure will have on the policy of the country. It may never become law. A goodly number of the members in the House are opposed to it altogether; others, again, who may be called favorable to it, would like some impossible thing mixed up with it; whilst others, whose ambition has been disappointed by this extraordinary move, will not give it a very reliable support. Certain it is, that if the measure be carried out in its entirety, it must go far to settle many of those sectional differences that have so long distracted the country. Many people in the House have been [illegible] on the subject; and to settle the question Mr. Brown requested Mr. Macdonald to state more explicitly than he had done before the meaning of the agreement, so that if possible there might be no misapprehension. Mr. Macdonald did so, and in a speech, from which we quote below, settled pretty plainly what he and his colleagues understood was to be the basis of the agreement entered into between them and Mr. Brown. An attempt will be made during the present summer to come to some arrangement with the maritime Provinces, and if possible to include them in the federation. Of course this cannot be done in a hurry; there are many parties to the bargain. The Imperial Government and the several governments of the Province to be consulted; all this will require time. Meantime, the proposal is to prepare a measure for the federation of Canada for the consideration of Parliament at its next meeting; said measure to contemplate, if need be, the admission on equitable terms of the maritime Province.

Mr. Brown, in order that the agreement might not be misunderstood, said that last evening questions were put to the Attorney General West and the Attorney-General East as to what was meant by the words in the document then read, "Local matters being committed to local bodies, and matters "common to all to a general Legislature, "established on the well-understood principle of a Federal Government." One would have supposed that these words were clear enough, and he had really thought that the questions were scarcely necessary; both the answers given were clear and distinct, admitting the possibility of any mistake. In consequence, however, of some discussion which had taken place in the other House, some members had got the idea that there was some mystery still attaching to these words; and he was sure the gentlemen on the Treasury Benches would be glad of the opportunity of stating beyond all fear of doubt what the meaning was.

Atty Gen. Macdonald said he thought it must have been very well understood, and especially by the gentlemen who spoke about it yesterday, what was meant by the Federal principle. He believed it had been represented very industriously, and he thought very unfairly, that there was a discrepancy between the statements made in the Upper and the Lower House. There was no such discrepancy. In the Upper House, however, their respected leader and Premier, Sir E. P. Taché, stated that there was the record which was the basis of the arrangement between the Government and the member for South Oxford, and he would not be drawn into a discussion upon it one way or the other, or express any individual opinion as to the details. He (Atty. Gen. Macdonald) could not do better than quote what he stated yesterday, as being what he understood, and what all the parties to the arrangement understood by the words in question. The principle was that there should be local Legislatures, having regard to local interests, and a general Legislature having control of the general interests common to the whole people of Canada. As to the formation of the local Legislatures—whether they should consist of one branch or of two—whether there should be a Governor for each, or one Governor should preside over the whole &c.,—no details had been entered into. As for the general Legislature, it was agreed that it should be constituted on the well-understood principles of a Federal Government. What those are was well understood by a reference to the constitution of all Federal Governments. He would not [illegible] with the history of the United States [illegible] for North America. (Laughter.) The understanding was that the Federal principle meant that in one branch of the different states should have their equal interests represented on the principle of equality, while the popular branch must have a popular basis, and the principle of numbers must of course prevail in the popular branch. They were not at all hampered by any [illegible], or anything that would [illegible] with class interests, property being protected as in England, where there was not merely the principle of numbers, but that all classes and the rights of property should be represented. The statement he made yesterday was as follows, and his colleagues in this and the other Chamber were perfectly in accord with him. He proceeded to read the following report, from the Courier, of his remarks yesterday, as giving concisely what he then stated:—

"The memorandum read conveyed the ex"press understanding (and while as to local
"matters the local Legislatures of each
"section or province shall alone have juris-
"diction, there shall be a central Legislature,
"the constitution of which shall be based
"upon the well-understood Federal principle.
"The member for Hochelaga did not require
"to be informed what that Federal principle
"was. As regards the upper branch of the "Legislature it meant equality, and as to
"the lower branch, meant representation
"based on population—(hear, hear)—but
"while this was the case, neither the mem"ber for South Oxford nor any member of
"the Government understood that represen"tation based on population was to be "understood as implying universal suffrage,
"but that in the lower branch of the Legisla"ture there shall be a representation based
"on population, with such checks and
"modifications as regards property as obtain
"in reference to this House at present. Pro-
"perty and population would be kept in "view in the settlement of the representative
"question." He had now only to add that in consequence of the misapprehensions which had arisen and the story which had got abroad that a difference existed; he had consulted his colleagues and they had authorized him to make the statement he had now made.

MEETING IN THE TOWN HALL.

Peter Pearce Esq., Warden for the County proposed the first Resolution:—

Resolved,—That in the opinion of this meeting it is desirable that a good leading road be built from the town of Peterborough northward to Hall's Bridge, thence through Harvey to Cavendish, to unite with a road which it is expected will be built by the Government to the town of Haliburton in the township of Dysart, and to urge upon the Government to assist the county in the above, as well as in making a branch road to connect this leading road with the Bobcaygeon road.—Carried.

In moving the resolution he said not long ago there were no settlers in rear of the lakes behind Smith. The idea that there were lands behind fit for settlement was scouted at, to-day there were three Reeves in the County Council representing large Municipalities and [illegible] settlers who had gone in were almost entirely from the old townships, men who knew what was required to make good country, and whose success in their new homes was the best evidence we could have of the lands. He urged the opening of a road back from Peterboro as the best means of making that vast section of country in rear of the town available for settlement. He read extracts from the report of the agent of the Bobcaygeon road similar to what we gave some weeks ago in an article on the Crown Lands report. Thirty years ago he said there were only two horses in the Township of Asphodel. Look at it now with its thousands of horses and cattle of all kinds, its roads and bridges, its Grammar School, Common Schools, Factories and Sawmills. It would be just the same, he continued, with referring once to these new Townships they were asking us to give a helping hand to enable them the more speedily to rise to something of the prosperity these old Townships enjoy. Nor was the benefit to be all on the side of the recipients. The Town of Peterboro more especially would be largely benefited by the proposed road. It would be the highway by which the settlers on many hundreds of thousands of acres would pour their produce into the garners of Peterboro. It would be but poor policy he said to refuse to construct this road penny wise and pound foolish. He stated that he had learned with pleasure from the surveyor, T. B. Clements, Esq., who had just completed the survey of a portion of the township of Harvey that at least 60 per cent. of the township was good arable land well adapted for farming purposes. There were 16 new townships just opened up that the road referred to in the resolution would make tributary to Peterborough. The testimonys of the surveyors, gentlemen well known to every one almost in Peterborough was to the effect that it was nearly entirely composed of good lands. Living as he did, and representing a township, in the east of the county, it might be wondered that he took so deep an interest in this matter; but he considered it his duty to lend his aid to any measure that would increase the prosperity and position of the country as a whole. He stated that there were two gentlemen present representing the English Company owning lands in the north part of the county, and he should be glad to hear their opinions.

Mr. Miles, the surveyor of the Canadian Land Company, stated that he had been for a considerable time occupied in surveying and settling the block of nine townships possessed by the Canadian Land Company in the northern portion of the county of Peterborough. The land was of an excellent quality, and the soil was admirably adapted to the Canadian climate. They had now about 40 settlers in the township of Dysart, and the Company had constructed a first class road from the southern boundary of Dysart up to the Peterson line. What they wanted was a road for settlers to go in and out. At present it was a matter of extreme difficulty, and the only means was by the waters of Lake Kashagawigamog, which reached from the town plot of Haliburton to within four miles of the Bobcaygeon road. The length of this lake navigation was nearly 9 Steps miles. Notwithstanding the difficulty experienced by settlers in getting to and from the settlement, he could state that he had heard no complaint made by any of their settlers as to the quality of the soil or the natural advantages of the locality. They had employed many persons in the construction of the roads, and these persons had become some of their best settlers. They were still at work constructing roads, for ten per cent. of the purchase money they paid to the Government was to be expended in road making. The result of this would be that the Company would be always prepared with roads into any township which the Government might open in the County. What he wished to impress upon the meeting was the necessity of the County constructing a main road up through the centre of their County to the boundary of Dysart. This would bring the town plot of Haliburton to within a distance of about 35 miles of Peterborough, and would secure the prosperity of the entire County. If it were not made then the company would have to open a road of their own, and this would necessarily be in such a direction that the traffic would flow towards Fenelon Falls and Lindsay rather than towards Peterborough. Those townships were at present completely isolated, but the company would not allow this state of similar to last for longer. He was advertising for tenders for the construction of roads that would give the settlement some outlet, but these would not render the less necessary a main artery that should carry all their traffic to the County town. This was their one great want, and this want the company were determined to have supplied. If the County of Peterborough should be so blind to its own interests as not to make this Buckhorn road, then he would have to look over the road now being surveyed by the County of Victoria along the shores of the Gull River water, and by connecting that road with the company's settlement make Lindsay and not Peterborough the commercial centre of the back townships. He hoped that this would not be the case, but trusted that Peterborough would arrive at a wise decision, and construct without unnecessary delay the Buckhorn road.

Col. Strickland, seconded by George Fitzgerald, Esq., Deputy Reeve of Smith, then moved the following resolution:

That the municipality of the County and Town of Peterborough should use every endeavor to bring prominently before the Government the necessity of constructing a look at Young's Mills, which would open a direct communication from Lakefield to the head of Stoney lake, a distance of 25 miles, thereby opening up the rear country more effectually, besides benefiting several old townships, such as Douro, Smith, Dummer, Belmont, Methuen, Burleigh and the east part of Harvey.

In speaking to this motion, Col. Strickland stated that a petition embodying the above resolution had been presented to Parliament over two years ago. It was signed by over 1900 of the most influential inhabitants of the County of Peterborough, but except a mere acknowledgment that it had been received, he had heard no more of it. That the work urged to be done by the petitioners was of the most useful character; that if it had been completed it would have opened up an immense tract of back country, and brought it into immediate connection with the town of Peterborough. That navigation would be by this means complete from the head of Stoney lake and the townships bordering upon it, to Lakefield; and that the continuation of the Chemong Railway a distance of five miles further than it was at present, was all that was needed to connect the farthest corner of that immense track of water and the townships bordering thereon with the town of Peterborough. Col. Strickland thought this work of the utmost importance; [illegible] approaching when it would be a matter of necessity, and would like to see all public men and all public bodies in the County of Peterborough identify themselves with the movement. But whilst advocating this measure, which he thought was his duty, and would always continue to advocate, it was not for a moment to be supposed that he was adverse to the road proposed to be built, on the contrary, every gentleman present could bear witness that he was always an advocate for good roads, and the one proposed to be built he considered one of the best that had been proposed for a long time. The roads in this County, he said, were among the worst in the Upper Province. We were not posted. Other municipalities all around us had better roads than we had; they had borrowed money largely to build roads whilst we had expended very little in that way. He would urge the construction of this road, certainly, but along with it he would press his motion, and more, he would have every man in the County press this motion till it was accomplished. He said that five miles of railroad and £5000 spent on a lock would secure, beyond a doubt, to the Town the trade of over 50 miles of country. He did not think there was another town in Canada that would hesitate at making at least an effort to secure such great advantages.

In reply to some further remarks of the Colonels,—

The Warden said that it would be well that the signers of the petition should understand all that could be known of its fate. He said that when the petition was forwarded to Col. Haultain, the then member, he Col. H. had written to the speaker as Warden of the County, stating that he had received no less than four petitions for large works to be done by the Government in the County. That the appropriation for such works by the Government of the day was small, and that if the prayer of the four petitions he had to present were granted it would absorb more than the whole parliamentary appropriations, and that, consequently, he had thought it his duty to consult him, as Warden, and the other heads of the municipalities, which work had better be pushed, provided the Government were willing that a share of the appropriation should be allotted to Peterborough county. That he, as Warden, had written Col. Haultain, recommending that an appropriation should, if possible, be got for the construction of a bridge over the Narrows in the north of Douro, which would connect the Burleigh road with Douro, and by this means the whole country, east and west, would be benefitted.

After this quiet in a pretty pithy speech, Col. Strickland pitched into both the Warden and Col. Haultain, whom the latter rose and said that the position he or any other member of Parliament was placed in by the many petitions sent for presentation was not well understood. There were an immense number of petitions presented every day, some of them far more numerously signed than the one here alluded to. That in addition to Col. Strickland's petition for the modest sum of £30,000, he had other three also on hand for sums not much less, all for the County of Peterborough; and when it was recollected that there was only £50,000 appropriated that Session for purposes of the kind spoken of both in Upper and Lower Canada, the difficulty of his position would be better appreciated. In this district only he had written the Warden and various Reeves of the County, stating the exact sum which was at their disposal, and asking them what in case, the Government should be induced to grant something more than the usual amount of necessity [illegible] some, should of the proposed work [illegible] be to expend on it the amount [illegible] which they had so kindly contributed or personal interest. It was very creditable to their public spirit to see them [illegible] this kind neighbourly spirit. He had always considered the position of the Bobcaygeon road to be a very great mistake. At the same time, he could not consistently rise through the very worst land in that section of the Country. It had made many a man who would have been a first class settler turn back, and such a basis to come other locality. We wanted very much a front leading to Peterboro. He had, while more not for the County urged the road now proposed to be built upon the attention of the Government and had succeeded in getting the road surveyed from Buckhorn to Dysart. The report of the Surveyor was highly favorable, not only as to the character of the Country through which it would pass, but as to its adaptability for a road. He thought, by uniting our efforts on this one very important matter, we had reason to hope we should be able to attain the object sought, but that if we aimed after to great many we might loose them all. He thought that the Government would only be doing its duty in opening up the Country and giving every facility for its settlement. To this end the moneys received from the sale of timber and lands ought to be spent in the improvement of the Country, and not diverted to the other expenses of the Government. He had taken a very great interest in the Back Country, and was glad to know that there was good farming lands in the rear of the County to support thousands of happy families. He knew that very many—he might say thousands—had been prevented from settling from the character of the land at the entrance to the Bobcaygeon Road.—He then referred to the apathy of the Town in not being more largely represented at the meeting. It was a matter of vital importance to the Town and should call forth its best efforts to secure the benefits that must unquestionably follow the construction of the road proposed in the resolution that had been passed at that meeting.

After some further discussion in which Mr. Grover and Col. Benson took part, the motion was withdrawn.

C. R. Stewart, Esq., the local agent of the Canadian Land Company next addressed the meeting. The company he had the honour to represent possessed a territory of surpassing fertility; it had a capital of between one and two million dollars; moreover, there was an organization in England to send out to this Country that description of settler most needed—the English capitalist; they had numerous advantages, but all their efforts to settle their territory with rapidity were rendered unnecessarily difficult by the want of a road into the settlement. The Company were determined to have a road, and the road by way of Buckhorn was the one that would suit them best. If Peterborough and the County Council would not meet the Company and come to some decision as to the construction of the Buckhorn Road, then the overtures of the people of Lindsay would receive their attention, and if the traffic of the back Country were once to get into that direction it would be highly injurious to the interests of Peterborough, for when a traffic had once commenced running in a grove, it was a matter of extreme difficulty to change its direction. The Company were prepared to co-operate heartily in the construction of the Buckhorn Road. He could not pledge the Company he represented to any particular course of action, but he could say this—if the Buckhorn Road were carried up to the Company's frontier, the Company would continue the road in a direct line through their territory, a distance of about thirty miles. There would then be a splendid road for eighty miles in a straight line through a country eminently adapted for settlement, having its terminus in Peterboro. They were most anxious to have this road, and their earnest desire to settle up the townships in their territory was manifested by the liberal terms they offered to settlers. They were prepared to allot lands to good settlers, and would give them a period of ten years to pay the purchase money. They had already constructed excellent roads through Dysart. They were building a dam and a saw mill would be at work by the 1st of October. A steamboat would be running on the Lakes on the opening of next year's navigation. Plans and Specifications had been prepared for the erection of a Church and School House; a fine piece of land had been appropriated for a glebe; and with a rare consideration for their settlers, the Company had made arrangements with Dr. Peake, an English Surgeon of repute, to give up his practice in London, and come to this country to reside at Haliburton. Dr. Peake would probably be settled in Haliburton next September. All that an abundant capital and energy could accomplish was being done by the Company to induce settlers to take up lands. It was now for the people of Peterborough to determine whether this promising settlement should give its trade to Lindsay or to Peterborough. If the Buckhorn Road were made, they would secure the trade to themselves; if they let the present opportunity slip through, they would be inflicting a serious damage on the future prosperity of their Town and district. He would in conclusion observe that the Company he represented on that occasion would be happy to co-operate in any way in the highly desirable object of opening the Buckhorn road.

P. M. Grover, Esq., Reeve of Asphodel, seconded by R. Morrison, Esq., Reeve of Dummer, then moved the following resolution which was carried without opposition:

Whereas—General explorations made from time to time by private individuals have developed a belief that mineral wealth of various kinds exists in large quantities in several of the new townships (and some of the old ones) of this County. A systematic and scientific exploration of those mineral districts would be of great use to the country, as by definitely ascertaining their real value so far as it could be done by skilful examination of the localities, a definite result would be attained, and the attention and capital now fruitlessly directed towards this pursuit would either be absorbed in more legitimate channels or else the development of our mineral wealth would receive an impetus which would greatly tend to further the material interests of the inland country. Since the creation and existence of works such as would thus be acquired would not only lead to the introduction of capital, but would create a ready market for the consumption of the products of the fields, a thing most desirable to the remote settlements.

Mr. Clinton, who had just come in, stated that he had not intended to take any part at that meeting, that in short, he did not know such a meeting was to be held till a few minutes ago, but having heard that such a meeting was being held, and that complaint had been proposed that the people of the Town were apathetic and disinterested, he had come to correct that impression. The Townspeople were not wanting in interest in this matter, and if they had been properly approached and consulted in this matter they would, no doubt, have been largely represented. What they complained of was that the influential inhabitants of the town had not been consulted in the matter. It was usual to consult them before anything of the kind was done, and if the Mover in such matters as this did not consult the more influential portions of the Townspeople at least, they had no right to complain of want of interest.

The Warden replied to Mr. Clinton by stating that large posters had been circulated everywhere calling the meeting, that it had been advertised in the papers for weeks, and as to consultation with the chief men of the town that had also been done, for no less than nine out of the twenty-four signatures to the requisition were inhabitants of the Town of Peterboro.

The following resolutions were then put and carried without discussion:

Moved by Mr. R. White, seconded by Mr. R. D. Ewing.

That in the opinion of this meeting a very large amount of traffic in the rear of this County is now finding an outlet via Lindsay, for which a cheaper and more natural outlet by this town might be found, and that it is the instruction to any committee appointed by this meeting to carry out its objects, that they communicate with the managers of the Peterboro' and Chemong Railroad and endeavor to secure the extension of that road from the Mills at Mud Lake and Peterboro'.

On motion of Col. Haultain,—The following to be a Committee to draw up petitions and take such steps as will further the objects of the meeting:—The Sheriff, the Mayor, R. Nicholls, W. Coulter, J. R. Benson, A. Fraser, E. Burnham, C. Ormond, R. White, P. Pearce, S. Strickland, R. Denniston, F. W. Haultain, P. M. Grover, W Cluxton, I. Garbutt, John Walton, R. D. Ewing. With power to add to their number.

The Sheriff [illegible] on motion requested to leave the Chair and Mr. Hepburn to take it, when votes of thanks having been passed to the Chairman and Secretary, the meeting broke up.)

THE RESULT OF THE MEETING.

As the result of the meeting, we may state that the County Council at their meeting next morning passed a resolution pledging themselves to vote half the sum necessary to construct said road, provided that the Town of Peterborough give a like sum, and that the Government have the subject pressed upon their attention with a view to the constructing that portion of the road between the northern boundary of Harvey and Dysart, and that the Warden and Messrs. Gilmour, Carnegie and Grover be a committee to bring the subject before the Town Council and the Government.

The same evening, a meeting of the committee appointed at the public meeting, was held in the Town Hall, and some remarks approving the project were made by Robt. Dennistoun, Esq., Barrister, and other gentlemen of the committee. A Memorial to the Government praying them to cause to be opened the two townships of Cavendish and Glamorgan, by the extension of the road proposed to be built by the Councils of the Town and County, was submitted and adopted. A sub-committee was also appointed to attend the meeting of the Town Council on the following evening.

On Friday evening, the Town Council held a meeting to take into consideration the resolution passed by the County Council with reference to the construction of the road from Buckhorn north, when after a full discussion they adopted the following resolution.

Resolved,—That in consideration of the Government and the English Company carrying on and extending the said road from the Township of Harvey as aforesaid, this Council accepts the offer of the County Council, and hereby agrees to pay one half of the cost of the construction of the said road through the Township of Harvey as aforesaid, assuming that the amount of making such last mentioned road in the whole to be in the neighborhood of seven hundred and fifty pounds, more or less, and the Mayor is hereby authorised to enter into any arrangement which may be necessary fully to carry out the work proposed, in connection with the County Council.

A Memorial similar in its object with that passed by the County Council and the Public Meeting, was also adopted and ordered to be signed by the Mayor and forwarded to the Government. Efficient committees have also been appointed by both Councils to give effect to the resolutions, and there is now every reason to believe that the much needed road will immediately be gone on with and carried through.

The County Council afterwards passed a resolution offering to join the Town Council in requesting Colonel Haultain to go to Quebec and urge upon the Government the propriety of opening up the road from Buckhorn northward to the township of Dysart. The Warden with Messrs. Carnagie and Ingram were appointed as a committee to confer with the Town Council in the construction of the road through Harvey from Buckhorn.

It is generally understood that the suggestion of the County Council will be adopted, and that Col. Haultain will proceed to Quebec at once. The appointment of the Colonel for this office is a happy one, as apart from the fact that his parliamentary experience enables him to know the ropes in Quebec, he also had a promise from the previous Government that they would give this work their serious attention, and pecuniary aid.

Since writing the above, we learn that the Canada Land Company have already taken steps to make their road from the point where the Buckhorn road strikes their boundary up to the Peterson line—a distance of 10 miles—and as we believe the Government will move at once in the matter, teams will be able to drive through from Haliburton to Peterborough during the coming Fall.

CAMP MEETING.

The Peterborough District Camp Meeting will commence on Friday, the 1st of July. The Rev. Mr. Brock, Chairman of the District, will open the Meeting. On Sunday it is expected that the Rev. Lanchlan Taylor, D. D., and other ministers, will preach. The grounds are wholly enclosed; over fifty permanent tents have been erected, along with a good plastered house, as a residence for the camp-taker. Every possible convenience has been provided for the accomodation of visitors, of whom a large number are expected to be present.

Owing to pressure on our space, we are again compelled to lay over a large amount of matter. Dr. Poole will oblige us for non-insertion of his letter; it is in type and will appear next week.

CRICKET.

On Friday last a very exciting and highly interesting Cricket match came off between a number of players from the Town and Union Jacks, the latter being composed of [illegible] from the Township of Otonabee, with a very few exceptions. Frequently when the men were in pursuit of the ball, the ground, as if by magic, would render itself very obnoxious and somewhat pugnacious, by coming in contact with the stubborn element, enabled the gentlemen with the willow to increase the number of runs opposite their names. We intend to say very little with respect to the playing on either side, for the reason that time and space will not admit; we cannot, however, in justice to the Peterborough Club, avoid manifesting the utmost of W. N. Kennedy and G. Burnham, whose bowling was very fine, nothing but the excellent position of batsman prevented the wickets from flying with every ball. They would place their men in the block, and strike at no balls unless they were wide of the wickets; thus it will be seen that it was impossible to bowl them out, and equally impossible to get them out any other way. For one whole hour, the only persons that had the least exercise were the bowler, wicket, keeper and long-stop. At last, however, things changed by Burnham putting in a decoy; this ball took the ground in front of the bat, made a half circle of the bat, and decoyed the middle wicket. This ended the first innings, with a majority of five runs in favor of the Lindsay Eleven. The bowling of Weller, on behalf of Lindsay, was very good indeed, especially in the second innings. Peterborough then took the bat and made 108 runs, leaving 104 for Lindsay to win. The time being nearly up for drawing the stumps, the object of Peterborough was to get their opponents out as soon as possible, caring not how many runs they made.—When seven o'clock arrived, it left Lindsay with 34 runs to win and three wickets to go down. The Cricketers then adjourned to a dinner given by the Lindsay Club, and gotten up by [illegible] Beamish, (who, by the way is a splendid fellow and a jolly Cricketer; Peterborough people going to Lindsay could not do better than give him a call.) After the usual toasts on such occasions, the company separated. We hope to see the return match played in a short time. The following is the score:—

SCHOOL EXAMINATION.

The Examination of the Common School of School Section No. 1, North Monaghan, under the care of Mr. C. S. Dunbar, took place on Friday, the 24th of June, in the presence of the Teachers of the School Section; and a number of the parents and guardians of the Children attending.

The children were examined in Reading Spelling, and in the meaning of what they read; also in Arithmetic written and mental; Geography &c. The Classes read well, with proper attention to pauses, tone, and emphasis. The classes in arithmetic distinguished themselves for the accuracy and speed with which they worked out the questions given; while the two classes in Geography acquitted themselves in a manner creditable to themselves and their teachers, and the same may also be said of the classes in mental arithmetic &c.

The Examination was gone about in a very careful manner, the various classes evidencing that they were progressing in their studies, and the Teacher proved himself to be able and conscientious in the performance of the task he has undertaken to perform.—Com.

The Rifle Match for the medals presented to the Volunteers of the Fourth Military District by Captain A. Hayward and Lieut. R. S. Patterson, took place on the Common east of Port Hope on Wednesday 22nd inst. The following companies were represented by a score of five men each: Three Cobourg companies, Capts. Elliott, Stanton and Weller; Three Port Hope companies, Capts. Williams, Stewart and Fraser; the Bowmanville Rifle Co., Capt. Cahill; and Capt. Kennedy's Co., Peterborough. The firing commenced at about 11 o'clock and terminated at 4. For the Hayward medal the range was at 200, 300 and 400 yards, three shots each; for the Patterson medal, same range, two shots. When the match was terminated, the companies were faced inwards, and Private Delaney of Capt. Elliott's Co., was declared the winner of the Hayward; and Private Jeffry, youngest son of the late Hon. A. Jeffry, that of the Patterson medal; Cobourg thus carrying off both prizes. The medals were then attended to the breasts of the successful competitors, with a few brief remarks by Brigade Major Patterson and Lieut. Patterson. The medals are to become the property of the winner of three matches. The next match is to be held on the same day next year in Peterboro.

Removal.—The Rev. James Brock preached his farewell sermon in the Wesleyan Methodist Church on Sabbath first previous to his removal to Peterboro, to which place he has been appointed by the Conference. Since Mr. Brock came to Guelph, three years ago, he has endeared himself to his own congregation and to christians of all denominations by his earnest piety, kindness of heart and the interest which he took in furthering every catholic and good work in the town and district.—The Wesleyan body in Guelph has prospered since he came among them, and unbroken harmony has marked the intercourse between the pastor and congregation. We trust that the same measure of success will be extended to Mr. Brock in his new sphere of labor. He will be succeeded by the Rev. John Carroll, late of Peterboro.—Guelph Mercury.

I HAVE taken the liberty through your valuable paper, to thank the Directors of the Royal Insurance Company, for the prompt and satisfactory payment of my claim for the destruction of my dwelling by fire, on the morning of the 26th of April last, amounting to five hundred dollars. Immediately after giving the Agent, A. I am confident in saying that all persons insured in the Royal will be fairly, honestly and punctually dealt with.

who they refused to sign the report which was adopted by a large majority of the committee, and which I (Mr. Brown) believe he did sign, I felt I could not with a sense of what was due to Upper Canada, refuse the offer of hon. gentlemen opposite to join their Government for the settlement of this great question. (hear, hear,) and my hon. friends (Messrs. Dorion and Holton) will do me the justice to say that when an invitation to enter on the discussions that have resulted, as we have seen this evening, was first addressed to me I took the earliest opportunity of stating my views upon that, I should hope to receive confidence from my hon. friends, and so often as the first discussion had taken place, I went to them as old friends, told them what I proposed to do, and asked their co-operation in the movement, but without success. I think, at all events, they must feel, that in taking the course I have taken, I have done [illegible] I have refused to do nothing; we have not asked you to endorse our measure. All we propose is to place the result of our labors before you at the earliest moment, and then leave you to judge whether it is a measure you can adopt or not. I pray my hon. friends to think of the deep importance of the issues at stake in this matter, and to consider whether it is not worthy of our most earnest efforts to try if we really can find a solution for that difficulties which have so long and so threateningly beset our country. When we look at the long records of able public men who have been sacrificed by the system under which we have been governed, when we look back on the discords and agitations of the last few years; I do say that if we can by any means find a solution for our difficulties, every man with the slightest stake in the country will have cause to be grateful to those who accomplish it. (Cheers.) Can they fancy it is to gain anything personal any of us have taken this position? Can it be in any shape an object of ambition to sit down in some Cabinet with gentlemen to whom you have been opposed for a lifetime, or to stand in opposition to old friends with whom you have acted cordially for years? Nothing but a most stern sense of duty could have brought me in such a position. I have struggled to avoid entering the Cabinet. I wished to stand outside and give hon. gentlemen opposite that loyal and hearty aid which I think every true Canadian was bound to give them in bringing our sectional difficulties to a permanent settlement. On this I was overruled; I have both found it amongst office against my wishes, and to the serious injury of my personal interests; and I think I am in a position to say to every hon. member of this House—let us lay aside parties to the politicians of party politics in the interests of our country; let us unite to consider and settle this question as a great national issue, in a manner worthy of us as a people. (Enthusiastic cheers.) I ask hon. gentlemen not to criticise too narrowly this early, but to give us the short time we demand for the preparation of our scheme, and when it is before the House then let them try it by its merits — if we are to be condemned let us be condemned. And to my hon. friends from Lower Canada, who may have some fears about this movement—who may be told that Mr. Brown has gained an advantage—that Upper Canada may get too much—I entreat that they will listen to no such insinuations. There is not the slightest desire for undue advantage, and everything that is done shall be done openly and above board. I am sure I speak the sentiments of every one who is a party to the agreement, in saying that we have had no desire in becoming parties to it, to attain any object but a just settlement of our difficulties, and the character of our country out of its present distracted position. (Cheers.) Mr. Speaker, I do not hesitate to confess my opinion that the course I have taken shall be fully understood beyond the walls of this House. In the remarkable vicissitudes of the years I have been in public life, if there has been any one thing that has specially sustained and strengthened me in the many difficulties I have had to contend with, it has been the conviction that I could not go into one county of Upper Canada [illegible] very many of the leading men of the Lower Province, prepared to accept party [illegible] personal feelings in order to meet on common grounds of patriotism—and, Sir, I think we may find additional cause for rejoicing in the position the view occupy when we look to the present situation of the great nation alongside of us, arising out of the great sectional difficulty—one of a still graver character than ours, because pecuniary interests were much more deeply concerned in it. If we look, however, at the several interests involved in our present movements and social questing after all affect the mind of the people much more deeply than those which are merely pecuniary—I think we will have much cause for thankfulness, if next session there is presented to this House a solution for our great difficulties that will be acceptable to the country (Hear, hear.) I do frankly confess Mr. Speaker, that if I refer had another parliamentary success than that which I have achieved this day, in having brought about the formation of a Government more powerful than any Canadian Government that ever existed before [illegible] to settle for ever the alarming sectional difficulties of my country, I would have desired it had a hand, however humble, in the accomplishment of that work. The hon. gentleman resumed his seat amid loud and prolonged cheers from all parts of the House, [illegible] Immediately afterwards numbers of both sections of the Province and from both sides of the House crowded round him to offer the congratulations.

Mr. Dorion, M.P.P. for the county of Hochelaga, said he did not conceive that a public man was at all bound by private or personal relations of friendship to be deterred from doing what he regarded as his duty. But, notwithstanding that he (Mr. Dorion) could not help thinking that the member for South Oxford was quite alone in

[illegible]

N. H. DOWN'S VEGETABLE BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

A CERTIFICATE WORTH A MILLION.

An Old Physician's Testimony.

READ:

Watertown, Vt., Nov. 24th, 1856.

Although I do not like the practice of Physicians recommending, indiscriminately, the patent medicines of the day: yet after a trial of ten years, I am free to admit that there is one medicine before the public that any Physician can use in his practice, and recommend to the public with perfect confidence; that medicine is Rev. N. H. Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

I have used it myself with the very best success, and now, whenever I am troubled with a Cough or Cold, I invariably use it. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are suffering from a Cold or a Cough, for the Croup, Whooping Cough, and all diseases tending to consumption, and to the Profession as a reliable article.

I am satisfied of its excellence beyond a doubt, having seen proof personally with the Rev. N. H. Downs about it. He informed me of the principal ingredients of which the Elixir is composed, all of which are purely Vegetable and perfectly safe.

J. B. WOODWARD, M.D.

Now Brigade Surgeon U. S. Army.

This old, time-tried, standard remedy still maintains its popularity. When all others have proved inefficient, the Elixir alone continues to give satisfaction.—Use it for

COUGHS, COLDS, CATARRH, ASTHMA, CROUP,

Incipient Consumption and all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs.

Thirty years ago the Elixir first made its appearance; and even then, in its primitive and imperfect state, produced such extraordinary results that it became, at once, a general favorite. Many have made it, what it really is, a Family Medicine.

For as more than half the diseases to which flesh is heir," originate from colds, so this may be considered a general preventive of all diseases, by removing the principal cause.

Agents

Should always be kept in every family, ready for instant use; and by its timely use save hundreds of dollars that would otherwise be swallowed up in doctoring doctors bills.

☞ Sold at fifty Depots and country stores throughout Canada.

[illegible]

Dr. TARRER,

Your [illegible] of your [illegible] I was in the business of [illegible] the [illegible] I was compelled to use the cause. I have no hesitancy in giving you my letter for publication as I think every body afflicted ought to try it.

Very respectfully,
Rev. Enos Gunn

Dr. TARRER,

Dear Sir,

I have used your German Ointment for sixth [illegible] and think it the best remedy in use for that complaint.

Yours truly,
Rev. Hazen Mercer.

Have used your German Ointment in my family, and I think it the best remedy in use for that complaint.

Yours truly,
Rev. O. Dorn

Cold Water, Mich.,
Oct. 9th, 1863.

Why is it that Doctors discourage the use of [illegible] Simply because it hurts their business, and nothing else. If a man is ill and is [illegible] by a few doses of Ayer's Pills, the doctor is not profited in any way. The almighty dollar causes many doctors to operate from the truth. A great many [illegible] the night to go [illegible] to see persons, and after arriving on the spot, found his services hardly wanted. Whereas if they would have taken a dose or two of some remedy commonly kept about the house it would literally speak have stopped the [illegible] has arrived when the people should have [illegible] the [illegible] out of a hundred. A Dr. is called, he leaves the poisonous stuff that robs thousands to an early grave, making the family believe what the patient takes it, what it destroys as mercury and that is all can heal him.

VALUABLE TESTIMONY.

DR. TARRER,

Dear Sir,

When you called at my house urging me to [illegible] you [illegible] I had little or no faith in it. I feel it is a pleasure to you then myself. I began to make experiments of it, continued doing so for eight days and nights, renewing the [illegible] every 12 hours. After using it for six days, my rheumatism was better, and it also [illegible] the disease left me. I was so bad that my [illegible] was drawn up, keeping me in my bed. I hope every body afflicted with the rheumatism will give your German Ointment a trial.

LOST WILLIE.

Oh, dear little thistle,
Come back to our nest:
The old house is lonesome without you;
Come, mother will hold you all day on her breast,
With the summer wittle blowing about you.
Lake touches the lilies
Light all the green valleys,
And over the windows swing garlands of blooms,
Where the red vine and jasmine fragrantly meet,
Like a mourner-like shadow keeps watch in each room;
Oh, lost little Willie! Oh, silence and gloom.
And the machine stands sadly in at the door,
Touching the floor
With its myriad feet,
Softly and silently seeking the sweet,
As a child seeks a playmate who lieth asleep.

Oh, dear little Willie!
Oh, white budding lily
Of May, that the chilly
Frost wind blew over and touched with a spell,
That keeps thee sleeping despite our wild weeping.
We loved thee. O darling we love thee, Willie, still,
Sleep little Willie,
When next the wild May-bee
Swings in the delicate cup of the lily
The innocent smiles of our beautiful hid
Under the roof of the dark casket lid,
Will break into blossoms of purple and white.
And the sweet morning light,
Solemn and tender, shall touch with rare splendor
The grave shadows chilly
That veil the blue eyes of our lost little Willie.

Literature.

PAUL GARRETT, OR, THE SECRET.

I had just acquired the right of placing the letters M. D. after my name, and was rejoicing over the bright prospects that were opening before me, when they were all blighted by the sudden death of my father, at the early age of fifty-three. My hopes of establishing a practice in London were dashed to the ground, as he had saved very little from his income of a thousand a-year which his situation under government yielded him, and as he died intestate, all his effects were sold, the proceeds of the sale divided between five of us—four sisters and myself—and when his affairs were wound up, we found ourselves each in possession of four hundred pounds. My sisters made up their minds at once to proceed to Australia, where as most of theirs was comfortably settled; but I preferred remaining in England, having no taste for life in the bush.

I was looking out for a situation as assistant to a country practitioner, when an old friend of my father's informed me of something that he imagined would suit me. Sir Clement Travanion of—well, we will say,—Moulton Bassett, was desirous of securing my services, as a painful disorder of long standing rendered it necessary that he should be constantly attended by a skilful medical man. Mr. Forrest (my informant) added:

'His present medical attendant, Mr. Simpson, whom I have known for years, is about to leave him, and has written to me to find somebody to take his place. You will receive five hundred a-year, have carriages and horses at your service, and only one patient to attend to. Not a bad beginning, eh?'

"It is so far beyond my hopes or expectations,' I replied, 'that I shall only be too thankful to obtain it, if I have the chance.'

'You may make sure of it, my dear fellow,' was the reply. 'Simpson's recommendation is all-powerful with the baronet, and my recommendation is all that Simpson requires. I will write to him by the next post, and you will hear from him shortly, no doubt. Now I must be off. Will you dine with me to-morrow?'

'With pleasure,' I replied; and we parted.

In two days I had a letter from Mr. Simpson, settling everything satisfactorily, and a week afterwards I found myself in the presence of Sir Clement Trevanion, a tall, dark, unhealthy looking man of about forty-seven years of age. He gave me a searching glance with his deeply-set eyes, and then received me graciously enough. Mr. Simpson, who had remained at Monkton Bassett, to initiate me into the method he had pursued in the treatment of his patient, had a long conversation with me, and from him I found that all was not cataleur de rose at Monkton Bassett, as I had almost been sure would be the case.

Imprimis, I was never to range beyond the grounds without permission.

Secondly, I was to exercise a strict surveillance over my patient's diet—a very disagreeable task.

Thirdly, I was to sleep in a room adjoining Sir Clement's, that I might always be within call. The carriage and horses were to be at my services when I rode out with Sir Clement, who could not take horse-exercise.

'Assert from those little drawbacks,' said Mr. Simpson, noticing the gradual elongation of my face, as he gave me the above particulars, 'my stay here has been pleasant enough. Besides, it is not for life, you know. I have now been with Sir Clement nine years, and with my saving, intend to buy a practice. Why should you not do the same?'

'Be that as it may,' I replied, 'I have accepted the situation, and mean to perform my duties conscientiously.'

'Ah! that's right,' was the reply. 'You'll get on very well with Sir Clement, no doubt.'

I could see, however, that he was overjoyed to be emancipated from his thraldom. But he gave me many judicious hints respecting Sir Clement's management, and encheered above besides, for which I was, and still am very grateful.

Then was I installed at Monkton Bassett.

The very day that Mr. Simpson left, the baronet gave me a sample of what I might expect. There was a fine haunch of venison on the table, and I, who affected no carver, helped him to a slice of it. On the plate being placed before him, he said, sharply,

'Take it away. I cannot eat the leg of venison.'

'The fat is poison to you, Sir Clement,' I remonstrated, 'and I am sure that Mr. Simpson—'

'Take it away,' thundered Sir Clement, 'I'll have none!'

And it was the same with almost every dish on the table. I began to fear that I should not get on very well with my patient, but what he was nothing, for he was talking (having all the talk to myself, however,) and fortunately happened to relate an anecdote which tickled his fancy. His brow relaxed, and after laughing heartily, he ate some boiled mutton which I recommended.

The evening passed pleasantly. Sir Clement drawing me out as much as possible to speak on various subjects. The next morning, after breakfast, I tried to persuade him to refrain from ordering for dinner anything injurious to him, but he cut me short by saying:

'I like to see a well-appointed table.'

'But, Sir Clement,' I urged, 'surely you can order an excellent—nay, a very sumptuous dinner, without subjecting yourself to the torments of Tantalus! And consider the unpleasant duty I have to perform, of prohibiting you from tasting what you would prefer.'

'Mr. Milburn!' said Sir Clement, abruptly, 'I like to see certain dishes on my table, whether I partake of them, or not. There!'

Of course no more could be said, and for some time we had daily squabbles of a similar kind; but I discovered after wards that Sir Clement pursued this course of contradiction, partly because it afforded him a pleasurable excitement, and partly to try the temper of his medical man. Mr. Simpson, it appeared, took refuge in silence, after a couple reply or two, but I pursued a different method.

After a while it became more manageable, and one day, said:

'I like you very much, Milburn; much better than I did Simpson. He was a clever conscientious man, but he certainly might have made himself more pleasant. However, perhaps he could not, therefore, it was his misfortune not his fault, still, I am very glad that you do not resemble him. Time does not hang heavily on my hands now, as it did when he was here. Are you perfectly satisfied with your position?'

'Perfectly, Sir Clement,' was my reply. 'I am quite comfortable now,' laying, perhaps, a slight stress on the last word.

'Ah,' said he, laughing, 'that now means, I suppose, since our daily grumbling disputes have ceased. I must confess that you kept your temper admirably, and have thereby secured my respect. I hope, Milburn,' added he, more gravely, 'that you will stay with me to the last, for I am not long for this world.'

I endeavoured to divert him from dwelling on such gloomy thoughts, and assured him that if he were careful, he might live many years. He smiled languidly, and replied:

'After all, though it is a sorry life I lead, I ought not to repine, for I have ample means of alleviating my own sufferings, and relieving the wants of others. Were I a poor man it would not be so.'

After a while, I succeeded in changing the conversation, and left him in pretty good spirits. I must here remark, that Sir Clement's clarity was unbounded, and he often requested me, as a favour, to give advice to those of his poorer tenants who needed it. He was scrupulously attentive to his religious duties, and kept the little church at Monkton Bassett (a tumble-down edifice, built of lath and plaster, which I never entered without fearing that a sudden gust of wind might blow it down), in repair at his own expense. I gathered from words dropped here and there, that he had been 'crossed in love,' as the old lodge-keeper expressed it, and that great disappointment had soured his temper and destroyed his health. But he entirely left off showing temper towards me. He made me his amanuensis, and I either read or talked to him, as he preferred. I received cheering news from Australia, three of my sisters were well married, and the fourth on the point of following their example, and for six years I was comparatively happy. At the end of that time, as I was reading to Sir Clement one morning, the steward desired to speak to him. On entering the room, he informed his master that the Elms, a cottage ornee, belonging to the estate, was let to a foreign gentleman—Mr. Randar.

Sir Clement said:

'Rander does not sound like a foreign name, Rogers; does it, Milburn?' appealing to me.

'No, indeed,' I answered,

'You must have made a mistake, Rogers,' said the baronet.

'Well, Sir Clement, that is what he calls himself,' said Rogers. 'But I have his card somewhere. Ah, here it is.'

And he presented Sir Clement with a card, on which was engraved: 'Don Pablo de Garay y Aranda,' which Sir Clement read aloud, after which he said:

'Oh! I see. A Spaniard I should fancy.'

Rogers said he was quite the gentleman. So liberal in everything! He did not wish Sir Clement to lay out a penny, but would do all that was necessary himself.

'Quite a pleasure of a tenant,' said Sir Clement, smiling.

And presently Rogers departed. Sir Clement called on Senor de Aranda, but he was not at home. The latter returned the call when Sir Clement was driving out with me, and there all communication ceased. An invitation to dine at Monkton Bassett was declined on the plea of Madame de Aranda's delicate health; but Sir Clement said:

'I would wager anything that it is pride that keeps the Spanish lady at a distance. Well! He must have his own way, I suppose.'

And he thought no more of the De Arandas. But one day

MR. BROWN.

The Conservative papers, with some exceptions, are wondrously exercised as to the policy of Mr. Brown. Some of them that lately denounced Mr. Brown as everything that was bad—his policy as the essence of meanness and duplicity—his influence as nothing—and his whole life a course of hypocrisy and deceit—are now tenderness civil. He has always been a straightforward honest man; they say they are; he has not made any change, the other party have adopted his views—not he come to theirs; no man but a patriot of the first water could have acted as he has done. The union with Cartier & Co., uncought on his part, and which must be painful in his eyes, was done for the noblest purposes. In fact, there is nothing more pure good for them to say of Mr. Brown. It is not difficult to tell why all this change has taken place, and why they are so civil. Mr. Brown is now virtually the Prime Minister of Upper Canada, and as such the public printing is at his disposal—hence their blindness. They are willing to swallow any amount of leeks if only they can be well paid for it. But the Leader and the True Witness, true to their old instinct, which nothing can counteract, come out boldly in their true colours. The Leader has long ceased to have any policy, and even his own supporters are willing to admit never had any influence. His sheet contains literally nothing but abuse of Mr. Brown. Surely the proprietor of the Leader must know that even if Mr. Brown was as bad or ten times worse than he represents him to be, his readers must long ago be nauseated by such constant repetitions of wordy vileness. We can scarcely expect anything better of the Leader; the old proverb is a true one: "You cannot bring a clean thing out of an unclean." But its confrere even excells the Leader in the vileness of its style. Archbishop Anen, still the editor of the Witness, can beat the Leader at abuse. Mr. Beatty ought to take a few lessons. Had we room we would quote a few sentences as the best antidote that could be given to correct such nonsense. One sentiment we heartily agree with. The editor of the Witness hopes the day will be far distant when any union for any purpose will take place between the Clear Grits and the Catholics; congratulates himself on the fact that the two parties have been and always will be totally distinct. We hope they will, and cordially congratulate the Leader and his friends that they are likely to have the True Witness and all its kidney on his side.

VOTE MAKING IN ASPHODEL.

We are in receipt of a letter from Mr. Poole the Township Clerk of Asphodel, which we publish pursuant to request, and which may be found in another column.

We agree with Mr. Poole in the conclusion that "legitimate criticism of public men or public bodies, when based upon truth and supported by facts is highly commendable," but we do think it quite too much to expect that a gentleman conducting a public newspaper should constitute himself a court of inquiry and as such sit judicially upon all matters brought before him, in all parts of the country.

The article referred to by Mr. Poole, was based upon information received from the mouth of a gentleman personally known to the Editor of this journal, and sufficiently credible in his eyes to warrant the publication, which even according to Mr. Poole himself appears to have had some foundation in point of fact. Our correspondent says, "this much is true that one man had eighty dollars added to his assessment at his own request, and was the only case where the motion of the court gave a man a vote not previously entitled to it," and thinks we will be at a loss to perceive the necessity for interference, &c., because the same party had previously enjoyed a similar privilege to which he was not entitled.

This seems to us no reason for non-interference if this same individual had improperly exercised the franchise before, his past misconduct gives him no right to do so again, nor does it lessen the guilt of those who connive at such practices.

Mr. Poole fails to give us the figures which on the assessment roll stand opposite to the names of Ryckle and T. Coughlin. We are informed therefore has been a great disparity in the valuations made of the respective properties of these persons.

Notwithstanding Mr. Poole's communication, what we have urged in this respect is without any satisfactory answer. We only desire to know the truth—and then to speak as we do know. At the present time our previous article appears by no means "utterly false or unsupported by a single fact," but upon Mr. Poole's own admission it is supported by a palpable example of one of the improprieties charged.

Of Mr. Beatty's estimate of his employers, we say nothing. They may or may not be as he says—and if they are even all that we could wish them to be—handsome as them would be often palatable if emanating from some other person than their own employee.

AMERICAN NEWS.

We are still without any news from Richmond what Grant is doing no one can tell. By telegraph to-day we learn that the Alabama was sunk off Cherbourg by the iron clad Kearsarge, Captain Winslow was served by an English yatcht. Another raid is being made by the Confederates into Maryland. They have taken Harpers Ferry.

We have had numerous communications from members of the Teacher's association. These gentlemen will excuse us when we say we have not room for so much on a subject not generally interesting.

PRINCETON RAILWAY ACCIDENT

In another column we give an account of a terrible accident that happened on the morning of the 29th ult. This is by far the most fatal accident that has happened on any Canadian Railway. According to a statement made by Mr. Daly, Superintendent Agent, the number of souls on the last special conveyed thither was 475. Of these, 204 were brought to Montreal on Wednesday evening. The number of bodies said to be recovered is 80, leaving 3 unaccounted for. Two of the emigrants have died since their arrival here; and yesterday afternoon the body of Fyrne, the conductor, was recovered. Under that three would complete the number said to have been on board the cars. They came by the Hecla, which arrived at Quebec on Sunday afternoon last, from Bremen via Hamburg. They landed 430 in number, 13 having died on the passage. One, an old man of 92, died after reaching Quebec. A number left for the West on Monday, and 344 started by the unfortunate train. A few families remained behind. They were Americans, Prussians, Swedes, Danes, Bohemians, Poles, and, in one or two cases, Italians. They were bound for Wisconsin, via Chicago—most of them to meet friends already settled in that region.

How far blame attaches to the engine driver it is impossible at present to tell; doubtless the Coroner will be able to show that somebody was to blame; but that the Grand Trunk Railway Company are largely to blame in the matter we have not the slightest doubt. Having carefully read all the evidence given before the Coroner's Jury, we have no hesitation in stating that the whole proceedings, in so far as this and almost every emigrant train on that Railway are concerned, calls for the severest reprobation. We blame the Grand Trunk Railway on the following grounds:—

1st. Although there was a standing order that trains should come to a dead stop before they came to the bridge, this order was often disregarded, and no notice seems to have been taken of this breach of their orders; indeed there is every reason to believe that this disregard of orders was winked at.

2nd. Because the engine driver was a man evidently incompetent for his position—unacquainted with the road, and the difficulties and dangers he had to encounter—had not been over this section of the road, and, very probably, had never driven a passenger train before. And yet this man was sent in charge of a train containing 475 human beings.

3rd. Because of the insufficient care that was taken to provide accommodation for so many passengers. 475 human beings huddled together in a few cars, some of them cattle trucks, the very smell of which in such hot weather was almost enough to create pestilence, without light, and, we believe, without water, or any of the conveniences necessary, when so many people have to be conveyed so far. To be conveyed 700 miles in such conveyances would be worse than the whole journey from Europe in a confined passenger ship. And yet this is a common practice on the Grand Trunk Railroad; we have, ourselves, seen passengers more than once conveyed in such cars; and on one occasion saw more than a hundred people in one of these cars into which the rain was pouring in all directions, and in which there were no proper seats, and the floor of which was a perfect slough of despond, the wet filth an inch deep on the floor.

Who does not know the miserable state of the cars in which they convey their second class passengers; dirty miserable boxes with uneasy seats covered with coal dust, the floor filthy and sloppy, and the air redolent of tobacco smoke. No smoking allowed in the first-class cars, but the snob may as often as he pleases puff his vile cigar in the face of the poor fainting female, who has only been able to buy a second class ticket.

PARLIAMENT PROROGUED.

On Thursday last, Parliament was prorogued, after a long and most eventful session. The history of the session has been so fully placed before our readers, that we abstain from further remarks. Below we give the Governors speech.

Hon. Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:—

I congratulate you on having brought to a close the labours of this protracted session, and on the large number of important measures both of a political and private nature which you have been enabled to pass.

I trust the Act respecting Insolvency will place the relations between debtors and creditors on a satisfactory basis, and will give relief to the honest but unsuccessful trader.

I have had great pleasure in giving Her Majesty's assent to the Act for the effective audit of the Public Accounts, and for the more complete prevention of any expenditure of public money without the previous sanction of Parliament.

The discoveries of mines of the precious metals within our territory have rendered necessary new regulations in reference to the management of that part of the public property, and I confidently expect that the enactments of the Gold Mining bill of this session will be found effectual for the protection of the revenue, and will stimulate the development of this important branch of the Provincial resources.

I rejoice to observe that you have adopted a measure for the improvement of the Jury system for Lower Canada, and I feel assured that the administration of justice generally throughout the Province will be simplified in procedure and reduced in cost by the other measures of law reform which you have matured.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:

The system of taxation which you have adopted will, I am convinced, lead to an equalization between the revenue and expenditure of the Province, within the next financial year. The result of your labors cannot fail to have the happiest effect upon the credit of Canada abroad, and will tend to promote the growth of public confidence at home. The provision you have made for the Militia and Volunteer forces will, I trust, raise to an important state of efficiency. I thank you for the supplies you have granted to Her Majesty for the general service of the year, and I will take care that they shall be administered with a due regard to economy.

Honorable Gentlemen, and Gentlemen:

The large number of private bills which you have passed and the nature of the subjects with which they are conversant, are satisfactory proofs of the growth of commercial and manufacturing enterprise and the energy which characterizes those engaged in industrial occupations.

I am glad to see that you have made provision for completing the survey of the line of railway by which it is proposed to connect Canada with the adjoining Provinces of British North America, and I trust the results of that survey may afford evidence that this great object is attainable at a cost within the means of those Provinces.

Messrs. H. Stenson & Son, who have been over 18 years in business in town, advertise a large and varied stock of Boots & Shoes in to-days issue. We can assure parties wanting goods advantage that they can buy them as cheaply there as any where else—and, what is better, they will wear well.

THE NEW CABINET MINISTERS.

The Gazette contains the appointment to offices of the three Upper Canada Members of the Opposition, it will be remembered that Mr. Brown and blustering had the membership of think. Sir Etienne, they keep aloof for the present, though their services would have been gladly hailed the shadow of one of the Ministers falling on some other party.

Mr. Brown has been appointed President of Council in room of Hon. Isaac Buchanan, resigned.

Mr. Hewett has been appointed Postmaster General, in room of Hon. Mr. Foley, resigned.

Mr. McDougall is to be Provincial Secretary, in room of Hon. Mr. Simpson.

The latter, the Leader says, is to be opposed by Matthew, Crooks Cameron. Mr. Cameron certainly polled a large vote against Mr. McDougall at last election, but that he will be able to oust the Provincial Secretary we very much doubt.

EXAMINATION.

In conformity with the sixth clause, of the eighty second section of the Upper Canada Consolidated Common School Act, the quarterly examination of Common School, of section No. 12, Otonabee, taught by Mr. German A. Mitchell, was held on the 30th day of June, when the pupils of the said section were publicly examined in the several subjects which they have been taught during the quarter. There was a large attendance of pupils, and quite a number of beautiful prizes were distributed between them at the close of the examination. It was also attended by quite a number of ladies and gentlemen as visitors.

We regret that we are unable to publish a list of the pupils who received prizes.—Com.

The Honorable Bilia Flint.—The Honorable gentleman is once more before the Electors. His address is in to-days issue. We believe that there is but one feeling concerning his past conduct. That he has faithfully redeemed his pledges and that he has paid the utmost attention to every matter committed to his care.

Mr. Conger.—We saw Mr. Conger on the street yesterday, and were glad to learn that he was improving fast, his general health is much better and he thinks a few weeks repose will put him all right. He intends visiting England for a short time soon. We hope he will return restored to health and strength.

Mr. Conger wishes us to state that any one having business with him would confer an obligation by calling on his solicitor, C. A. Weller, Esq., who, until he has fairly recovered would attend to it for him.

Murder in Ops.—On Tuesday morning the 28th ult., a man named John Finnigan was shot dead by a tavern keeper named Robert Finnigan, who, though of the same name is no relative. It seems that on Monday there had been races under the auspices of one Crowley, who keeps a tavern opposite Finnigan's. A number of men had been drinking all night after the races in Crowley's with occasional visits to Finnigan. John who was killed was amongst the number who went to that tavern, and by some means they quarrelled, Robert turned him out and told him if he came back he would shoot him. He did come back, and was leaning against the door stoop, when the other (Robert) greatly excited ordered him off again, threatening to shoot him. The other replied, "Bob would not shoot him surely, he knew him too well." Scarcely had he spoken when Robert raised a loaded gun and shot him through the heart—dead. An inquest was held on the body next morning, and a verdict of "Wilful Murder" returned against Robert Finnigan, who had meantime given himself up to the Constable.

The "Lady's Friend" for July.—The July number of this magazine is one of the best yet issued. It opens with a beautiful and piquant steel engraving, called "How they Caught Fish," which represents a couple of young lovers earnestly engaged in conversation, apparently much to the astonishment of a party of ladies, who have just come to the edge of the woods. Then follows a very handsome fashion plate, such as this magazine is become noted for. Then an engraving of the Empress Eugenie, and a large number of others, devoted to the illustration of the latest styles of dress, &c. The music of this number is a Grand March from the opera of Faust. The literary matter includes "A Story for Sisters-in-Law," "Mistress and Maid," (with an illustration) "Edna's Faith," "Richard Graham's Love" "The Maiden Answer." "First and Last," "The Transformed Village," (illustrated,) "A Woman's Pride," Editor's Department, &c., &c. Price $2.00 a year; 20 cents a single number.

LETTER FROM THE WAR.

Camp 16th, N. Y. Vol. Cav.
Annandale, June 23rd.

Dear Parents—I take the present opportunity of letting you know how I am getting along in the first place we have settled down again only 8 miles from Washington on the Fairfax road. It is a first rate place, only we might as well be 500 miles off for we never get into the city. Last week there was a lot of us went out to the wilderness for to get some of our wounded that was in a rebel hospital. I tell you Father it is the last time I ever want to go over a battle field, the dead lay just as they had fallen, a person could almost imagine that they saw them fall; here was half a dozen killed by a shell, a little farther on, and two parallell lines showed where a desperate charge had been made and as desperately met. So it was all over the ground for miles, with the exception of about half a mile around the hospital, where the battle seems to have raged the fiercest. The dead lay five or six deep, here it was the rebels broke, and after leaving the Hospital it was a regular slaughter for the next four or five miles. I was never so glad as I was when we turned to go back. I had to shut my eyes to keep the horrible spectacle out of sight. Let any one pass over that ground and say that American soldiers are not courageous or brave, do not think that I am boasting, for I was not there nor any of our regiment at the time of the battle. I think we are settled for the summer, we have a party of about 50 out scouting all the time, I think the object is to see that no large body of troops may collect and do damage before they could be stopped. My hope and prayer is that this war may soon be over, and then what a happy meeting we would have. I do think this war will be over this fall. I can hardly believe that it is only eleven months since I left home, it seems as if it was three years already, but my courage is as good as ever in fact I am just as independent as a lord, for I know my duty and do it that is more than a great many can say.

HUGH ROBERTSON.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

Sir,—Your editorial details in last week's issue, charging the Township Council of Asphodel with "tampering with the Assessment Roll," "Manufacturing Votes" "and generally acting in a manner unbecoming," &c., &c., is certainly calculated to create a false impression in your informant; whose "ipse dixit" is grossly in advance of his "knowledge"; and may soon familiar with the facts of the case, you would regret having given publicity to misfortune, false and calumnious, in regard to a body of men, who, whatever may be their faults or errors of judgment, are probably not more wicked than the average of mankind; and who are certainly not more regardless of the rights and amenities due to others in the community than yourself or your informant. This much is true—that one man had eighty dollars added to his assessment, at his own request, and was the only case where the Court gave a man a vote not entitled to it; and when I add, that the same property, on the Assessment Rolls for several previous years, was valued at from forty to sixty dollars higher than it now is, after that addition (of $50) has been made, and that the owner or occupant has unvariably had a vote upon it, you will be at a loss to perceive the necessity for the threatened interference of the Reform party to do justice in this case. It is true that J. Coughlin Esq., of Hastings, appealed to the Court of Revision, in a very indefinite way, in regard to certain matters relating to his own assessment and that of some others, and that the Court after patient enquiry declined to alter the valuation affixed by the Assessor. Mr. Coughlin has given notice of an appeal to the County Judge, and if any injustice has been done, it will doubtless be rectified, even without the pressure of your political friends.

It must also be admitted that while the main sitting of the Court of Revision was held early in May, a second, or adjourned sitting was inadvertently held on the fourth day of June,—a few days after the time fixed by law for finally revising the Roll; but no ratepayer objected, from this circumstance alone it would be difficult to find the precise "outrage" or act of "corruption" said to be committed.

I trust these statements will find a place in your columns, as a simple matter of justice to the Council of the Township of Asphodel in the meantime; and I would merely further remark, that, while legitimate criticism of public men or public bodies, when based upon facts is highly commendable it ought not to be too much to expect that a gentleman, conducting a public newspaper, would be at some little pains to ascertain the truth or falsity of a statement, (made to him, perhaps, under the hasty impulse of passion or pique,) which seriously compromises the good name of individuals or Communities, before publishing it to the world. The disregard of a rule like this, so plainly written in the first principles of social and civil intercourse, cannot fail to recoil upon the press, and ultimately, if persisted in, to bring its conductors into contempt.

Yours, &c.
THOS. W. POOLE,
Township Clerk.

The RECENT RAILWAY DISASTER

THE CORONER'S INQUEST.

THE HOSPITAL.

From the Montreal Witness.

We are not at all satisfied that even handed justice will be meted out to all parties concerned in the frightful accident of the Richelieu Bridge, for the following reasons:

1. By a letter from one of the Committee of Germans, &c., it will be seen that a great part of the suffering and death was caused by the unwarrantable employment of box or cattle cars for the conveyance of immigrants. When these cars tilted up, the temporary seats and all their occupants were hurled to one end, to suffocate even if not killed by bruises. Had the Company provided second class cars, as they were, we understand, bound to do, the passengers could have clung to the seats, and they would have had windows to escape by. This looks on the part of the Company fixes upon it all the consequences.

2. According to another letter the engine driver, having such a mass of humanity in charge, was not a regular driver, and was unaccustomed to the route where the accident occurred, and, moreover, though he violated the printed rules in not coming to a full stop before crossing the bridge, he did not violate the use and wont of the road. We do not say that these statements are correct, but we say they deserve the most searching investigation.

3. According to an article by our Reporter it will be seen that the Grand Trunk Company with its tremendous influence is strongly represented at the Coroner's Inquest, and that unless the Coroner see to it, or the really independent men on the Jury take the matter into their own hands, there may be a failure to obtain all the facts upon which a verdict should be based.

4. We learn that the Grand Trunk is settling as fast as it can with the sufferers at the hospital, in the presence of a very few gentlemen. Whereas, we think a committee of our first citizens should be present to decide what is fair in each case. The public are, at the same, excluded from the hospital, which may be necessary for the repose of the sufferers, but should not the G. T. be, for the time, excluded likewise? Surely if the wounded are well enough to settle intelligently the amount of compensation they should get for their losses and injuries, they are well enough to see their comparatively few fellow-countrymen in this city, who can converse with them.

Burney, the Driver of the Emigrant Train—His Version.—During the Coroner's inquest yesterday, Wm. Burney, the engine-driver, was present, and, from enquiries which we afterwards made of him, we find he alleges that he endeavoured to stop the train as soon as he saw the red light on the top of the semaphore, on his coming round the curve on the track. He asserts that he reversed the engine, and declares that when it shall have been raised, the truth of this declaration will become apparent. He says he went down with the locomotive into the Richelieu; that when he arose to the surface his hair was not only wet, but had sand in it, as from the bottom of the stream, and the inside of his watch still shews something not unlike particles of sand. He confesses that he did not know where he was before he came to the St. Hilaire Station; and had to ask the fireman or conductor. In fact this was the first time he had acted as driver on the road, which he had passed only once or twice before as fireman. He was, he states, unacquainted with the fact of their being a down grade between St. Hilaire Station and the bridge, and altogether, the engine and train would seem to have been, under his guidance, unmanageable at the most critical moment. He was unexpectedly put in charge of it at Richmond.

A Double Suicide.—A young man named Shelan, near Ottawa, Ill., committed suicide by drowning. He had only been married about a week. It is said the young man wanted to marry another girl, but his parents, who had great influence with him, overruled him and compelled him to marry as he did. That, it is supposed led him to take his own life. But the drama was not to end there, for the wife of a week was so distracted by the death of her young husband, that she procured some corrosive sublimate and attempted to swallow it dry. The poison mostly sticking to her throat caused her neck and throat to swell to a fearful size, and produced an agonizing death in a few hours.

New Clock and Watch Establishment.—Mr. McClelland advertises Clocks, Watches, and Jewelry for sale in Joseph Dixon's old stand. He offers to sell Watches cheap; and to show that they are good, will guarantee them for two years. We hope he will get his share of the trade.

The Bulls and Bears on Wall Street New York.

The editor of the St. John, N. B., Freshwaterian thus describes the scene which presented itself to him on a recent visit to Wall street, New York:—

Tall and black-bearded, I rolled out to the entrance of Gentle and commenced boring my way through the throng, which, I was informed, was the Gold Brokers Exchange, at the corner of Prince William street. I met an acquaintance at the door. "Would you like to have a look at the 'bulls' and 'bears?" "Agreed." It was the first time I had ever seen these celebrated performers engaged in their financial pastime. There is a good sized room, without seats. In one of the corners there is a desk; an elevated stand occupied by two or three persons towards the back part of the room; a black board, to which is appended the late telegraphic despatches (in the newsroom adjoining the fuller telegrams may be read; almost hourly or more frequently announcements of the price of gold as the day proceeds.) This room is well filled. The occupants are the gold brokers. They seem to rush towards the centre, thronging and jostling each other. They each hold a memorandum book in one hand and a pencil in the other. They are buying and selling gold in sums of 5, 10, 50 or 100 thousand dollars. There is no president; no auctioneer; no salesman. They are all salesmen and all purchasers. They each shout at the top of their voices what they want to sell or buy, and they not seldom perform both operations at the same moment. A dozen, a score, two score of sharp voices greet your ears at the same instant. They rush towards the inner circle, stretch out one of their hands to catch the eye of their fellows (like the boys at school who are ready to answer a question) and are answered as quickly. Entries are make in the memorandums, fortunes lost and won in a moment, by a process which the uninitiated can ill understand or trace. "I'll give ¼ for 50?" "I'll sell 20 for [illegible] regular?" "Sold—I take it?" "I'll sell 100 at ¼, seller 3?" I'll give ¼ for 50, regular?" Such is the jargon by which, at a moment when gold has been sold at 196 and a fraction, and is on its way down to 193 and a fraction, brokers offer to buy $50,000 at 196¼ sell $20,000 at 196¾, $100,000 at 196½ seller having three days to complete contract, &c. Gold only exchanges hands in the case of a few bona fide purchasers. The bids and offers are guesses at the way the war news, or news of the day, the foreign demand for gold, the action of Mr. Chase (whose sudden financial changes drive some men of wealth to the wall, and as suddenly enrich others, new men in the world of wealth), &c., may effect public confidence in the solvency of the United States; in other words, in the value of the currency. The "bears" were "short," and wanted to buy on the Saturday of my visit, so they alleged that Jefferson Davis was about to leave for Europe; that Lee's army was in a critical condition; that Mr. Chase had offers of millions of gold from Europe; That the gold bill before Congress would bring down gold with a rush; thd "bulls," to carry "up" the market ridiculee these stories, and told others; that ninety thousand of the flower of Grant's army were gone; that the real state of affairs at the front was concealed; that the volume of currency must be increased, &c. These statements and counter statements were made in an under tone in little groups, and during a lull in the shouting of the bulls, and sellers. Any one can see how fortunes are made and lost. A broker sells a million of gold on Saturday at 93¾—three days to deliver; it goes up meanwhile to 93¾, making a loss to the seller and a gain to the purchaser of $50,000, and so on.

FRIGHTFUL RAILWAY ACCIDENT

NINETY LIVES LOST.

From the Globe.

Bekeil Station, June 28.

A serious accident happened this morning, about half-past one a. m., to an emigrant train from Quebec. The train stopped at St. Hilaire, about one mile from the bridge across the Richelieu River, where there is a swing bridge. The swing bridge was opened about a quarter past one, to let a number of barges, in tow of a steamer, pass. The proper signals were turned before the bridge was opened, and the red light was burning. The man in charge of the bridge, when he heard the whistle, waved his red hand-lamp. The standing orders are, that all trains must come to a full stop before reaching the bridge. This was disregarded, and the train ran into the open draw. A number of emigrants are killed and injured, but it is impossible to say how many at present. A large body of men are at work clearing away the wreck. At 8 a. m., 34 bodies were recovered, and between 30 and 40 taken out more or less injured. Depth of water in draw, ten feet.

Bekeil Station, 12 o'clock.

The number of bodies recovered to this time is 43, of whom 14 are boys, 12 girls, 5 men, and 12 women. There are about 40 seriously wounded, some of them not expected to live. A considerable number of dead bodies are known to be still in the wreck. About nine o'clock an engine and car arrived from Montreal bringing Coroner Jones, Mr. Pominville, Solicitor of the Grand Trunk, and a large number of workmen to clear away the debris in order to get out the dead bodies and recover the goods of the emigrants. The utmost diligence has been exercised, but much yet remains to be done. The cars lie mostly a pile of fragments, crushed together, resting on the barge which was fortunately passing through at the moment of the accident.—Had the cars fallen into the open water, to the number of deaths caused by being crushed in the smashing of the cars must have been added a vast number of drowned. All the barges in tow of the steamer had passed except two. Those on the barge actually passing through the bridge saw the train coming, knew what must happen, and jumping on the barge behind saved their lives. The locomotive has submerged in the water out of sight. The appearance presented by the wreck it is impossible to describe. The train consisted of two or three second class cars, and the remainder box cars fitted up with benches for the emigrants. The two or three last cars, when we arrived at the scene of the accident, about seven o'clock, remained on the top of the pile comparatively unbroken; the rest were a confused broken heap something lying on their sides, others upside down, broken into and crushed by those above them, while in some cases a car lay flattened almost like a pancake, between two others. The wheels lay confusedly scattered here and there through the heap. The leg of a child might be seen protruding from under a plank; at another place a man's head severed from the body, which appeared like a shapeless mass of bloody clothes. The bridge, which is a tubular iron structure the cars running along the top of the tube—is some 35 feet high, counting from the level of the rails to the level of the water. The width opened by the swing, which is at the western extremity of the bridge, is about 60 feet.

When I arrived 34 bodies had been recovered. During the forenoon several others have been taken out, but the remaining dead are chiefly in a car so wedged in amongst the fragments of the others that many have not even yet been reached. As I write the body of an old grey-haired man, respectably attired, is taken out; the Hebrew head still grasps a large long-handled china pipe. A quarter of an hour ago a leg of 30 was taken out, apparently Hebrew, left hand covered with blood and possessing a thumbed spectacle. On rumours being circulated that the bodies were to be sent away from the locality, many people to-day sent down, but only a few slightly injured. The effect which such a scene as presented itself first to the mother, besides others, cannot but have been trying in the extreme. Within the last few minutes the bodies of two innocent, of two or three years, have been got out and borne past to the dead house. The dead are lying at the upper left of a shed on the river side, about one hundred yards below the scene of the accident. A number of the more seriously wounded are in the lower part of the same building.—Already two or three have been transferred from the receptacle for the wounded to the ghastly upper chamber set apart for the dead. Others of the wounded are in a tavern close beside the scene of the accident, and in the adjacent sheds and other out buildings.

TAKING OUT THE BODIES.

Night covered the first fearful work of disentangling the bodies of the living and the dead. Three cars were piled on the wharf at this side of the river, the uppermost on a level with the bridge and hindering it from shutting. This car was quickly cleared and thrown over the bridge that those below it might be reached. It is said that three persons were taken from it alive, after it fell. The second was emptied with more difficulty; it contained some dead. In the car which lay under the other two, all were found safe, although it had fallen perhaps 50 feet. A more fearful sight was the the opening of the pile which lay in the stream; two cars on the top were cleared in the morning, the last living person being removed about 11 o'clock—a little child in the arms of a dead mother. The next car was reached about 3 o'clock, and eleven bodies were found in a heap at the lower end of it. Up to the time when our reporter left the ground, 56 was the whole number of dead bodies taken out of the heap, but one or two cars were yet unreached.

THE DEAD AND WOUNDED.

A tavern stands within a few yards of the spot, the lower story of which, as well as a number of sheds connected with it, were used to lay out the wounded and dead. A shed at the water's edge was used as a dead house, where the bodies of the dead, with all that was found on their persons, are laid close together; some in the position in which they might sleep, perhaps were sleeping at the time when death sealed their sleep forever—others in postures of agony, and many fearfully crushed, discolored and disfigured. The great majority of these dead were under age, and some were infants of a few months. In another part of the same shed the wounded last taken out were attended to by Drs. Hingston, Scot, Howard, and others, who had been on the ground since dawn. In the other sheds and in the house by these whose wounds had been dressed, weary and still, except where here and there a child was moaning or crying. It was strange to see here infants who apparently escaped unhurt, perhaps at the breast of a wounded mother. There are some who did not seem to have objects of solicitude besides themselves, yet few made much demonstration of feeling or suffering.

A London comic paper called Fun has published this scorcher. The deputations ought to be well received:—

(From the Dahomey Daily News)

On Monday last his Majesty the King of Dahomey presided at a large and influential meeting held for the purpose of considering the advisability of sending a mission to the benighted states of Europe, America and elsewhere. It was urged by several speakers that the various so-called civilized nations were in a most unenlightened condition. It was proved by statistics that the amount of human blood shed since the time of the battle of the Alma until the present day was almost enough to submerge Europe and float all its fleets. The Americans were perhaps in the darkest depths of ignorance in this matter. It was, therefore, proposed to send a mission to New York, another to Richmond, a third to Warsaw, a fourth to India, with power to establish a branch in New Zealand. It was also pointed out that a few missionaries would find a large field for their labours in Schleswig-Holstein at this moment. His Majesty, in his concluding speech, approved highly of schemes propounded by the meeting.—Alluding to the native "customs" of Dahomey, he observed that of course they were quite alive to the necessity of occasional blood letting for the sake of the statistics, and to keep down the population. At the sametime he thought the hour had arrived when they were imperatively called upon to rescue these benighted whites from the grovelling degradation and barbarity to which they had fallen. Finally, he compared the relatively small number of victims who had been required for religious purposes in Africa and other countries where the Christian religion was not in the ascendant, with the tremendous catalogue of those who had been sacrificed to ambition, envy and lust of conquest in the regions where that creed was supposed to flourish. The meeting concluded with a vote of thanks to his Majesty, who proceeded at once to assist at a "custom" which had been appointed for the afternoon in honor of the objects of the meeting.

A Good Resolution.—When you have made it maintain it firmly. Don't let your own prejudices nor the influence of others move you from a determination to persevere in the right. When you find that "Henry's Vermont Liniment" is a good remedy for the disorders it is intended to relieve, don't give up the use of it for something else that may not serve you as well. It will relieve cholic, headache, toothache, rheumatism, &c. &c. Sold by all Druggists. John F. Henry & Co. Proprietors, 303 St. Paul St. Montreal C. E.

CARD.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

I HAVE taken the liberty through your valuable paper, to thank the Directors of the Royal Insurance Company, for the prompt and satisfactory payment of my claim for the destruction of my dwelling by fire, on the morning of the 28th of April last, amounting to five hundred dollars. Immediately after giving the Agent, A. Smith Esq. notice, notwithstanding the badness of the roads, he came and made the necessary survey and enquiry concerning the fire, and in a few days the money was forthcoming.

Dentistry

WHEN Mr. Dodge, the celebrated ecclesiastical physician, was lecturing through the States on the laws of health, and especially on the evils of tea and coffee, he happened to meet one morning at the breakfast table, a son of Erin.—Conversation turned on the doctor's favourite subject as follows:

Perhaps you think I would be unable to discover your use of the destructive tea and coffee?

I don't know said Erin, but I'd like to be there when you do it.

Well, said the Doctor, if I convince you that they are injurious to your health will you abstain from using me?

Sure and I will, sir.

How often do you use coffee and tea? asked the Doctor.

Morning and night, sir.

Well said the doctor do you ever experience a slight dizziness of the brain on rising to [illegible]?

I do; indeed I do.

And a sharp pain through the temples is, and above the eyes in the morning?

Troth, and I do sir.

Well, said the Doctor, with an assurance and confidence in his manner, that is the coffee and tea.

Is it indeed? Faith and I always thought it was the whisky.

The company roared with laughter, and the Doctor quietly retired. He was fairly beaten.

A worthy Scotch couple, when asked how their son had broken down so early in life, gave the following explanation:—"When we begun life together, we worked hard and lived upon porridge and such like, gradually adding to our comforts as our means improved until we were able to dine off a bit of roast meat, and sometimes a boil—chickie (chicken;) but as for Jack, our son, he worked backward and began with the chickie first."

A farmer's wife meeting one of her neighbors returning from market, inquired, what do they pay for eggs at market, good? I got only eight cents a dozen, replied the indignant dame. Well, I should be happy to get eggs for eight cents. It don't pay for the wear and tear of the hen!

PATENT WATER-DRAWER!

You must remember that by buying one of my Water-drawers, you get your water pure, which you cannot do by a suction Pump. I warrant them NOT TO FREEZE, and to stand as long, if not longer, than any Pump; and, besides, you save over fifty per cent. I can sell them cheaper than any Pump-maker in Canada! If anything goes astray by fair play within one year from the time of purchase, I shall expect to re-place it; so you cannot be deceived. Now, any one who has tired of a Pump would do well to get one of my Water-drawers at once. I have two teams out at all times to deliver them, and persons residing at a distance will receive prompt attention by sending a letter to the undersigned

N. H. DOWN'S

VEGETABLE BALSAMIC

ELIXIR.

A CERTIFICATE

WORTH A MILLION.

An Old Physician's Testimony.

READ!

Waterbury, Vt., Nov. 24th, 1858.

Although I do not like the practice of Physicians recommending indiscriminately, the patent medicines of the day; yet after a trial of ten years, I am free to admit that there is one medicine before the public that any Physician can use in his practice, and recommend to the public with perfect confidence; that medicine is Rev. N. H. Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

I have used it myself with the very best success, and now, whenever I am troubled with a Cough or Cold, I invariably use it. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are suffering from a Cold or a Cough, for the Croup, Whooping Cough, and all diseases tending to consumption, and to the Profession as a reliable article.

I am satisfied of its excellence beyond a doubt, having conversed personally with the Rev. N. H. Downs about it. He informed me of the principal ingredients of which the Elixir is composed, and all of which are purely Vegetable and perfectly safe.

J. B. WOODWARD, M.D.

Now Brigade Surgeon U. S. Army.

This old, well tried, standard remedy still maintains its popularity. When all others have proved insufficient, the Elixir alone continues to give satisfaction.—Use it for

COUGHS, COLDS, CATARRH, ASTHMA, CROUP,

Incipient Consumption and all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs.

Thirty years ago the Elixir first made its appearance, and ever since, it has, in its primitive and imperfect state, produced such extraordinary results that it became, at once, a general favourite. Many have made it, what it really is, a Family Medicine.

For as more than half the diseases "to which flesh is heir," originate from colds, as this may be considered a general preventive of all diseases by removing the primeval cause.

ADULTS

[illegible] two wineglassfuls at bed time. This [illegible] relieving, and by its timely use save hundreds of dollars that would otherwise be swallowed up in discharging doctor's fees.

Dr. TANNER,

Dear Sir,

I have used your German Ointment for the Itch, after I had been troubled with it for years. I had tried many remedies, but found no relief until I used your Ointment. I would recommend it to all who are troubled with the Itch, as I believe it will cure them. I am yours truly,

REMARKS.

If a person breaks out with the Itch he does not expect to get cured in one day, but has a family to support, and must work to get bread in the Market. By reason, the Ointment will leave the skin [illegible] and [illegible] in one week. Dr. Tanner's German Ointment is the only one that will cure the Itch in this climate. Do not be deceived by any other man or beast.

Dr. TANNER,

Dear Sir,

I was in the summer of 1863 afflicted with the rheumatism. I was compelled to use two canes. I used your Tanner's German Ointment as you directed me about [illegible] weeks, when I began to get better. I am now able to walk without any canes and consider your remedy the best I have ever used. I have recommended your Ointment to many of my friends, and they have found it to be all you claim for it. You are at liberty to use this letter for publication as I think every body afflicted ought to buy it.

Very respectfully,

Branch County, Michigan, [illegible]
October 3rd, 1863.

Dr. TANNER,

Dear Sir,

I have used your German Ointment for sick headache and think it the best remedy I ever use.

Respectfully yours,

Dr. TANNER,

Dear Sir,

I have used your German Ointment for chill blains, and I [illegible] very handy in use for that complaint.

Yours truly, [illegible]

Cold Water, Simcoe,
Oct. 9th, 1863.

Why is it that Doctors discourage the use of many good medicines sold at the drug stores? Simply because it hurts their business. Nothing else. If a man is ill and is not cured by a few doses of Ayer's Pills, the doctor is not praised in any way. The almighty dollar counts many dollars to impose upon the truth. A great many run for a doctor if they do not feel as well as usual, and, subscription doctors' bills, when with a little common sense and watchfulness it could be avoided. Doctor Tanner has been a physician for over 25 years, and in making mention of the above facts from experience, has seen it to his own interest. He has been called up a great many times in the night to go and [illegible] to some person, and after arriving on the spot found his services hardly wanted. Whereas if they would have taken a dose or more of some remedy commonly kept about the house it would doubtlessly would have cured them. The time has arrived when the people should have learn to do with the calomel, mercury system. On an average the most of death is done at once out of a hundred. A Dr. is called, he leaves the poisonous smell that takes thousands to an early grave, making the family believe when the patient takes it, that it contains no mercury and that it will not hurt him.

VALUABLE TESTIMONY.

DR. TANNER,

Dear Sir,

When you called on my house urging me to try your Ointment for my Rheumatism, I had little or no faith in it. I took it more to please you than myself. I began to make application of it, continued doing so for nine days and nights, rubbing the Ointment every 3 hours. After using it for six days, my rheumatism was better, and in nine days the dreadful disease left me. I was so bad that my limbs was drawn up, keeping me in my bed. I hope every body afflicted with the rheumatism will give your German Ointment a trial.

Your obedient servant,

NATHAN ROB

THE OLD FOLKS' ROOM.

The old man sat by the chimney side—
His face was wrinkled and wan;
As he leaned both hands on his stout oak cane,
As if his work was done.

His coat was good old fashioned gray,
His pockets were deep and wide;
Where his "specs" and his steel tobacco-box
Lie snugly side by side.

The old man liked to stir the fire,
So near him the tongs were kept;
Sometimes he mused as he gazed at the coals,
Sometimes he sat and slept.

What saw he in the embers there?
Ah! pictures of other years;
And now and then they wakened smiles,
But often started tears.

His good old wife sat on the other side,
In a high-backed flag-seat chair;
I see 'neath the pile of her muslin cap
The sheen of her silvery hair.

There was a happy look on her aged face,
As she busily knits for him;
And Nellie takes up the stitches dropped,
For grandmother's eyes are dim,

Their children come and read the news,
To pass the time each day;
How it stirs the blood of the old man's heart
To hear of the world away.

They taught our youthful feet to climb
Upward life's rugged steep;
Then let us gently lead them down
To where the weary sleep.

PAUL GARRETT, OR, THE SECRET

CONCLUDED.

We walked together until we came to where Alice and her aunt were seated. I presented my friends Mr. and Mrs. Aranda, but was astonished at the strange effect produced on Aunt Winifred by the introduction. She started forward, and after peering curiously at Paul from under her coarse red eyebrows, seemed to settle down into her usual manner. It struck me, too, that Paul was not unmoved. The pupils of his eyes were dilated to an unnatural size, and an indescribable change came over his countenance, but it was only momentary. Alice and Clara soon became friendly, Paul joined in their conversation, and I was left to take care of Aunt Winifred. She whispered:

'Where did you become acquainted with that gentleman?'

'I met him while I was at Sir Clement Trevanion's,' I replied.

'Oh!' A pause. 'You say he is a foreigner?'

'He told me he had come from Cuba,' was my evasive reply.

I felt assured that Aunt Winifred held the key of Paul's secret, whatever it might be, and determined to be upon my guard. She muttered to herself:

I asked her to walk about with me. She consented, but was pre-occupied and absent until we resumed our seat. I invited Paul and his wife to a friendly dinner, but he declined the invitation. It was settled, however, that Clara should accept a seat in my carriage to convey her to the hotel where she and Paul were staying, that Alice and Aunt Winifred should accompany her, while Paul and I walked home together. After seeing the ladies in the carriage, we turned our steps homewards, and walked along Kensington without Paul opening his lips. But wishing him to be forewarned, I said:

'My wife's aunt was very particular in her inquiries about you'

'What!' he exclaimed, 'is she, Winifred, your wife's aunt?'

'She is, indeed!' was my reply; 'and, moreover, she lives with us.'

'Good heavens!' said he, an expression of horror flittering across his face; then, turning to me, he added, 'For the love of Heaven, Milburn, do not drop a hint to her of your ever having known me as a medical student, and, above all, don't mention that I was ever in Wales.'

'I will take care to do neither of those things,' I replied. 'I told her I met you at Sir Clement Trevanion's.'

'And what did she say to that?' asked he, eagerly.

'Appeared very much puzzled,' was my reply.

'Milburn!' said he, impressively, 'I am the most miserable of men! Not exactly through my fault—circumstances—false information that misled me—I may some day, perhaps, tell you all—it will be a relief to me—but now—not now.'

I parted from him soon after, and when I reached my home I was met by Alice, who, in great perturbation, said:

'George, do you know that I fear Aunt Winifred is going out of her mind?'

'Why do you fear that, my love?' asked I.

'She has been talking so absurdly, that it would be really laughable if it were not too shocking. Only fancy! She declares that Mr. de Aranda is an Englishman, and her husband!'

'What could possibly have put such an idea into her head?' I asked.

'She says she was married secretly to him years ago, when he was very young—that he was her step-father's assistant at Shrewsbury, or some such name, in Wales. Is it not dreadful? And she actually talked of setting a detective to watch him, and find out all about him, but I persuaded her to wait until you returned.'

'You did quite right, Alice,' I said; 'I will speak to her by-and-by.'

We dined, and after dinner Aunt Winifred, with great solemnity, desired to speak to me. I was prepared for what was coming, and waited patiently to hear what she would say. She began:

'That man you introduced to me to-day, George, who calls himself a foreigner, is no such thing! He is an Englishman, his real name is Paul Garrett, and I married him in Wales fifteen years ago.'

'Hist,' I objected, 'Mr. de Aranda is still a young man—not above two or three and thirty—at that time he must have been but seventeen or eighteen.'

Aunt Winifred winced at this: she gave a dry cough, and said,

'He was eighteen, and I was several years older. But that is neither here nor there. He is my husband in spite of those nasty moustachios, and I'll prove it, too, before I have done with him.'

'Now, my good aunt,' I remonstrated, 'pray do not excite yourself. Be calm, and tell me how you came to lose sight of this husband of yours for so many years.'

'You shall hear, George. We did not live happily together. Paul was so wilful and so disinclined to take advice which was all for his good! At last he went off to South America. From there he wrote once to say he was going to Jamaica, but on his way there the ship he was in was lost, and it was reported that all on board perished. I have supposed him dead for many years. But he is alive, I have seen him to-day, and he has married again. His wife, indeed! I'm his wife.'

'Now be calm, pray,' I urged. 'Are you quite sure that no fancied resemblance—'

'No, no!' interrupted she, fiercely. 'I am certain of what I say. Besides he is a face that time does not change much. Fifteen years ago, he looked much older than he was, and he would look younger than he is now, if it were not for that nasty hair about his face.'

Aunt Winifred seemed to have taken Paul's mustachios in especial aversion. She resumed:

'Now, George, tell me. What had I better do?'

'It is a very awkward business,' said I, soothingly. 'Only suppose that you should be mistaken, what then? If you make any disturbance about the business, you will bring vexation and annoyance on worthy people who have never injured you, and do yourself no good. You say your marriage was secret. Why was that? I presume you were of age.'

'I will tell you.'

Another dry cough.

'The fact was that my step-father, Mr. Jones, had plenty of money, and had promised to leave it to me if I behaved well to him (for his own daughter had married against his will and gone to Australia), and I was afraid to tell him I had married his assistant, for fear he should be angry with me. That was why I kept the marriage secret.'

'Well, aunt,' I said, 'my advice to you is, do nothing rashly. I will try and find out, if possible, the antecedents of Senor de Aranda, and then we can make up our minds how to act. I must now leave you, for I have business of importance to attend to.'

'But,' persisted Aunt Winifred, 'would it not be better to have him watched by a detective?'

'To what purpose?' I asked. 'Is he not staying at the ——?'

'True,' replied she. 'Well, I will wait to see what you find out.'

I left her, but as I was quitting the house was waylaid by Alice, who lamented the delusion under which her unfortunate aunt laboured. Alice was firmly persuaded that her aunt could never have been married, and imagined her story a fiction from beginning to end. But I knew better. I felt sure that I had found out Paul's secret, and my compunction was great, at being forced to act a lie to my wife, for was I not aware that Paul Garrett and De Aranda were one and the same? Still, when I reflected upon Clara on the one hand, and Aunt Winifred on the other, my sympathies were all en irely for the former, and I wished to hear from Paul himself how it all happened. I was sure he had not sinned wilfully, and how could I be a party to any plan that would consign that poor, innocent, confiding Clara to shame and disgrace?

I hurried to the hotel. On entering the room where Paul and his wife were, the latter exclaimed:

'Oh, Dr. Milburn! I am so glad you are come! I wanted Pablo to let me send for you. I am sure he is ill. He has not been himself all day.'

'Why, what is the matter?' I asked.

He shook his head.

'You are looking pale and fatigued, yourself, madame,' said I to Clara. 'I would suggest your retiring early, and recommend your husband to have a cigar afterwards as a sedative.'

'I will retire now, Dr. Milburn,' said Clara, 'and I can leave you, querido Pablo, in Dr. Milburn's charge. I do feel rather tired, and that is the truth. So good night, Dr. Milburn.'

At last we were alone, Paul and I.

"You must think I am a great villain," said Paul.

"Appearances are strangely against you, I must own."

"I will tell you how it all happened," said Paul; "and indeed I have been longing to do so, ever since we met at Monkton Bassett. I know Winifred too well not to be certain that she will not leave a stone unturned to find out the truth, and she will follow me to the end of the world rather than loose her hold of me. I have not wilfully wronged her, as you shall hear.

"I was placed at the age of fourteen as apprentice to Mr. Jones, Winifred's step-father, to remain with him for four years, with the promise that after completing my medical studies, I should become his assistant. I had neither father nor mother, and for the first three years my position was as lonely and wretched as could well be imagined. At the end of that time I shot up, and improved in appearance. Miss Winifred began to take notice of me. She was not ill-looking, though she had high cheek-bones and red hair. I was no longer 'that boy,' but 'Mr. Paul,' and as I had at that time a weakness for sweetmeats and dainties, Miss Winifred daily manœuvred to my failing with unwonted cordiality. She reigned supreme in the household, and my situation was far different to what it had been. She plyed me many deliciousness with such tender forethought, that I became quite attached to her—I mean I felt deeply grateful for her kindness towards me.

"I expected to go to London as soon as I had completed my eighteenth year, but shortly before that time arrived, the bank in which the money had been invested for that special purpose broke, and I was left without the means of qualifying myself to become Mr. Jones' assistant.

"What was I to do?"

"Winifred and I held several consultations together on the subject, and the upshot of it all was that she promised to find money for me to go to London and I agreed to marry her.

"We were secretly married and for some time I was not unhappy, though Winifred could scarcely bear me out of her sight, but that I excused, imputing it to her excessive fondness for me. But when I mentioned the journey to London, she raved at the idea of our separation, and begged me not to think of it. Needlessly, however, for a stern mistress. I pointed out to her that I must either qualify myself for her father's assistant, or seek my bread elsewhere, and to London I went!

"There I met you, Milburn, and you know whether I spared myself in the pursuit of my professional studies, or indulged in any of the gaities patronised by my companions. You remember how often you reproached me for the solitary cheerless life I led. I paid a short annual visit to Wales, and on those occasions it appeared as if the sole object of Winifred's life was to consult my happiness. At last I returned to Wales for a permanency, and became Mr. Jones' assistant. I received a small salary, and this became the bone of contention between my wife and me. Winifred made many attempts to obtain the mastery over me in all pecuniary matters, but I stoutly resisted her tyranny, and at last on my peremptory refusal to set down every farthing of my expenditure (in a book ruled and prepared by herself) we came to an open rupture. From that time my life was a perpetual torment, and I really believe I should have put an end to it and my misery at once, had I not heard of an appointment in South America; and, on the impulse of the moment applied for and obtained it. On my telling Winifred what I had done, her anger exceeded all bounds, but I cared little for that, the prospect of freedom was before me, and I listened to her reproaches in silence.

"I pass over some years spent in South America, and hasten to the time at which I left for Jamaica. The ship to which I sailed was wrecked, but two other men and I, saved our lives by clinging to some portion of the rigging, and we were picked up by a Spanish vessel bound for Cuba. I arrived there, and found employment. Shortly after my arrival, I accidentally saw in an English newspaper, six months old, the announcement of the death of Winifred Davies, of Llanvargwn. I will not deny that the certainty of being freed from a hateful tie, was not unpleasing to me, though I dreamed not at that time of forming a new and more auspicious one. But some time after, I met with Clara, an orphan heiress, and though at first, I dared not raise my eyes to her, yet, after a nearer acquaintance, I wooed and won her. Clara was always anxious to visit England; and, two years after our marriage, we left Cuba, and arrived here in safety. At that time, a relation of Clara's was consul here, and she went to stay some time with him and his family, while I, impelled by some fatality, went down into Wales to make inquiries respecting my first wife. Who can describe my horror on finding her still alive! I hurried away from the place, a vulture gnawing at my heart. But on before I had ascertained that the Winifred Davies to whom the announcement which I had seen referred, was a grand-aunt of my wife's of the same name. I need not tell you, Milburn, that since then I have not had one moments peace. The dread of discovery constantly haunted me. I took Clara to Italy and to France; but as she preferred England, I at length returned here, and settled on Monkton Bassett, as being a secluded, out-of-the-way place. But you were there! Had not Clara been the sweetest tempered being in the world, she could never have borne with my fitful moods at that time, and it was positively a relief to me when I could distribute myself of part of my secret to you. Now you know all. And I tremble lest Clara should discover that she is not my wife. But I have not sinned wilfully.'

'No, Paul,' I replied, 'you have not, and it is to spare your poor Clara from suddenly gaining a knowledge of the truth, that I am here. Aunt Winifred has recognized you, and wished to set a detective to dog your steps, but Alice believes that she is deranged; and I, heaven forgive me! have not discouraged the idea, to gain time. You must leave England immediately!'

'What can I say to Clara?'

'Tell her you are summoned away upon urgent business. Say that you will leave her in charge of Alice and me. If I am not mistaken in her, she will not question your actions. Start from here by the first train to-morrow, after sending me a note in a disguised hand, telling me you had been obliged to go. If you intend to go to Spain, say you are summoned to go to Germany, and vice versa. And now I must leave you. Have you money enough for your present emergencies? If not I have brought—'

'Oh! I have plenty,' interrupted he, 'but would that I were a daily labourer, so I could have peace.'

I rose and prep red to depart, and after he had wrung my hand warmly, with 'God bless you, Milburn,' I left him.

I reached home at a late hour, but found Alice sitting up for me. I scolded her for so doing, but she told me that Aunt Winifred had passed the evening in alternate fits of raving and depression, and that she (Alice) was quite alarmed about her. But as she retired to bed at last, I expressed a hope to my wife that she would sleep off her strange notion, and be herself again in the morning. I then sought my pillow, but obtained no rest that night.

The next morning a note was brought to me from Paul. It ran as follows:

Dear Dr. Milburn,—I am suddenly summoned to Cuba, on business of the utmost importance. I may say indeed that it is a matter of life and death. I therefore write to entreat you and Mrs. Milburn to take compassion on Clara, a helpless fond stranger in a strange land, and to give her an asylum during my absence (which will, I hope, not extend beyond eight or ten days). I have no time to add more, and, with best regards to Mrs. Milburn, believe me,

Dear Doctor,
Faithfully yours,
DEGARETT ARANDA.

The signature was in one continuous scrawl.

Alice proposed to go instantly and fetch poor Madame de Aranda, and I acceded to the proposition. Before whom Clara was installed as our inmate, and remained more than a month with us. Aunt Winifred was completely mystified by the sight of Paul's note, which Alice mentioned having received, and as she had eagerly requested to see his handwriting, Alice gave her the note. She perused it attentively, and then muttered:

'Not in the least like his writing. It's very strange! Degratyrander!' And she fell into a fit of musing.

Clara bore Paul's absence with resignation. She knew that some mystery was connected with his departure, but such was her perfect faith in him, that she never dreamed of anything to his prejudice, and Alice learned to love her as a sister, to the great annoyance of Aunt Winifred, who had conceived a violent de'ike to her, calling her 'a finical little thing,' and also taken great offence at her wearing a gold cross on her neck. She returned to her hunt after Paul with renewed vigour, after a short lull, and went out one morning to secure the services of a Private Inquiry Office. Her manner, however, was so strange, that the person to whom she applied doubted her sanity, and sent a man to the address she had given to enquire into particulars. By great and good fortune Alice saw the man, and impressed as she was with the idea of her aunt's derangement, she had little trouble in persuading the detective of the fact, but suggested that, to keep her quiet, he should bring fictitious accounts to her from time to time. Nothing could have happened more opportunely. I thereby escaped falsehood, and Aunt Winifred received accounts of Paul's whereabouts. He was taken from Cadiz to Baden, from thence to Switzerland, whence he was conveyed to Paris. She paid, exultingly, to Alice:

'I can lay my finger on him when I choose! That's a comfort!'

The detectives services were engaged for a month, at the end of which time he informed her that her quarry had returned to England, and was now at Birmingham, No.— Oriental Place, under an assumed name. She told this to Alice in confidence, but Alice did not repeat it to me. At this time, I could quite conscientiously have affirmed that Aunt Winifred was not of sound mind; by constantly dwelling on one idea her intellect had been shaken, and I had directed Alice to keep a strict watch over her. We supposed, afterwards, that an advertisement of an excursion train to Birmingham had caught her eye, and led to the disastrous consequence that followed. One morning, she did not appear at breakfast, and we heard that she had left the house at five o'clock, a. m., in a cab, ordering the man to drive her to London Bridge terminus. Alice immediately suspected that she had gone to Brighton, and made me acquainted with her suspicions, but we thought no more of it. In the course of the day, however, I heard that a terrible accident had happened on the Brighton line, and on making enquiries found my worst fears confirmed. Aunt Winifred had been killed by a collision that had taken place, and I broke the melancholy tidings to Alice as gently as I could. Alice lamented loudly that her poor aunt should have met with her death while labouring under so great a delusion, and I was obliged to hear her regrets, knowing all the time that the unfortunate woman had only told the truth. That was my hardest task.

Aunt Winifred was buried in Woking Cemetery, and after her interment I wrote to Paul. He answered my letter in person, and shocked Poor Clara by telling her that his absence had been caused by his having received information that their marriage had not been properly solemnized; that it was informal, in fact, and that it was necessary they should be re-married. Clara submitted to him without a murmur, and I gave her away at a church in London. The instant the ceremony was concluded, a weight appeared to be lifted off my mind, and I prayed devoutly that I might never again become the depository of a similar secret. But was I wrong in keeping it? I think not.

An Irishman, driven to desperation by stringency of the money market and the high price of provisions, procured a pistol and took the road. Meeting a traveler, he stopped him with—"Your money, or your life?" Seeing Pat was green, he said—"I'll tell you what I'll do; I'll give you all my money for that pistol." "Agreed." Pat received the money, and handed over the pistol. "Now," said the traveler, "hand back that money, or I'll blow your brains out!" "Blaze away, my beauty!" said Pat, "Never a dhrop of powther there's in it."

Jake was a contraband, who was notorious for "going by the rules of contraries," as he expressed it. When Rebel soldiers were going by Jake was strong Union, and when Federals he was a violent Secesh. One day Jake was in the yard when a company of Federal soldiers passed by. A soldier told him to hurrah for the North; without any hesitation, Jake yelled, "Hurrah for Dixie!" The soldier angrily said: "Hurrah for h—ll, you fool?" Jake looked around to see if the way was clear, and roared, "Every fellow for his own country, Sah!" and skedaddled in haste.

HOW A BRITISH WAR-MARE WAS MARRIED.

A Manchester Merchant recently engaged Mr Lamb, while one morning, a manufacturer of that famous city of rich stuffs, talked for an audience. Considering its precedent to spread out before and entertained entrance a lengthened list of costly pattern goods.

"Well you please accept this, and make my fortune," said the purchaser.

Explanation over, it was soon understood that it was a business affair altogether. The ingenious warehouseman knew very well that the superb wreath before him set the fashion, as to cut and quantity of dress, for all Paris. Yellow velvet was what he best knew how to make, and indeed more it by but it would at once be all the rage, if seen upon her.

It was doubtful. The salesman crying, Bah, by the contortion of the eloquent pleader of his own cause, the incitement of the actress was overcome. The velvet was handed over to her dressmaker, and made up for the tragedy which she was to play with Talma the week after.

But, on seeing herself in the full length mirrors of the green-room, before the drawing up of the curtain, Mars "didn't gave why!" "I look really too ridiculous," she exclaimed, "I just like a huge country Miss—and I cannot appear." Call the manager, and postpone the performances."

And, with this sudden intelligence, Talma rushed from his dressing-room.

"Is that all?" he exclaimed, as he surveyed the magnificent woman; "why you never looked so superbly in your life! Chance has favored you. The toilet is a miracle of effective beauty!"

The play went on.

In ten days afterwards, the rotunda of Paris were perfectly golden with yellow velvet. Every woman of fashion must appear in that, and no other.

And this was the reason for the grand fete given by the wealthiest manufacturer to Mademoiselle Mars, on her return, years after to play again at Lagny. It was at a superb country house on the banks of the Seine, and he had purchased it, with the fortune made on the yellow velvet!

AN HONEST DEACON.

Deacon D——, one an honest old codger, a kind neighbour and a good christian, he living in the Presbyterian creed to the fullest extent; but lackaday! the deacon would occasionally get somewhat mellow, and almost every Sunday at dinner he would indulge in his favorite cider brandy to such an extent that it was with difficulty he reached his pew in the broad isle, near the pulpit, and between the minister and the village squire. One Sunday morning the parson told his flock that he should preach a sermon touching many failings with no compunctuous coming them—and he hoped they would listen attentively and not think of what happened to be secret. The afternoon came and the house was full; everybody turned out to see their neighbors "dressed down" by the minister, who, after well opening his sermon, commenced up on the transgressors with a loud voice, with the question, "Where is the drunkard?" A solemn pause succeeded the inquiry, when up rose Deacon D——, his face red from the frequent drafts of his favorite drink, and steadying himself as well as he could by the pew rail, looked up, and replied in a trembling and piping voice, "Here I am."

Of course a consternation in the congregation was the result of the honest deacon's response; however, the minister went on with his remarks, as he had written them, commenting severely upon the drunkard, and closed by warning him to forsake it once and all, while it be would hope for salvation, and flee from the wrath to come.

"And now," said the preacher, in the loudest tones, "where is the hypocrite?"

A pause but no one responded. Eyes were turned upon this man and that man, but the glances seemed to be directed to the square's pew, and, indeed, the minister seemed to squint hard in that direction.—The deacon saw where the shaft was aimed or where it should be aimed, and rising quite near, leaned over his pew to the squire, whom he tapped on the shoulder, and thus addressed him:

"Come, squire, why don't you get up? I did when he called on me!"

CURIOUS FACTS.

It is well known that the casualties on the battle field bear a very surprising disproportion to the amount of ammunition expended. In the severest engagements of the rebellion, after two or three days of sanguinary fighting, marked by the constant roaring of artillery and the incessant crash of musketry, by far the largest part of the contending forces have escaped unharmed. At the same time the weapons employed are of the most approved construction, the missiles of the most destructive patterns, and the position of the combatants selected with a view to inflict the greatest amount of injury. Many causes an 'patently conspire to insure a the inadequacy of the results to the means. Some very curious facts were developed by the inspection of the guns captured on the field of Gettysburg. About 28,000 muskets were found, of these, 20,000 were found to be loaded, 12,000 containing two loads, and 6,000 from three to ten loads each.

In numerous instances half a dozen balls were driven in upon a single charge of powder. In some cases the former possessor had reversed the usual order—placing the ball at the bottom of the barrel and the powder on the top. Not unfrequently the several paper cartridges were pasted down to each other without being torn or broken. One Springfield musket contained twenty-three loads, all of which were regularly arranged. Other arrangements equally extraordinary were discovered.

It will be seen that the loading of all the captured muskets were doubled. It is fair to infer that many in the hands of the soldiers were in a similar condition, and therefore were harmless. These facts, when must be true to a greater or less extent in every battle, will accumulate a reason for the ineffectiveness of fire arms.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL ON HIS TRIAL.

The result of the recent crisis in our Parliamentary affairs occasioned no small degree of surprise among all classes and creeds. Such a union of men, and such a disposition to measures for constitutional Reform was little dreamt of. To one who watched the adverse elements in the House, and marked the increasing strength of the Liberal party of Upper Canada—a coming crisis was more than a matter of speculation: it seemed reduced to a certainty. After the outgoings and incomings of several Governments, and after appeals to the people had only drawn the lines clearer, and shown more distinctly the nature and power of the opposing currents; swords were measured, and the votes of the House stood balanced, without a reasonable hope of permanent increase to either party. Such a state of things under such circumstances demonstrated clearly the instability of the present union as it stands, and the absolute necessity for some system of Government by which local interests would be protected by local legislation—and the strength of a union when unaffected by sectional differences preserved and maintained.

The new Hon. President of the Council: a man to whom the Reform party of Upper Canada has for years looked on as its real Leader, met the crisis and sought in it an opportunity for pressing a settlement of those constitutional questions which have so long agitated the country. The details of the arrangement by which Mr. Brown was induced to become a minister of the Crown in company with Mr. J. A. Macdonald is no doubt well known to our readers. That the member for South Oxford assumed a grave responsibility in taking office to the end proposed, and did so in a frank spirit of patriotism, few will deny — and that his statesmanlike ability and undoubted devotion to the cause he espouses afford a guarantee for the accomplishment of those objects, the attainment of which are so earnestly sought, we think sufficiently clear to any impartial mind. There is perhaps no man in the Province who has been more frequently assailed than the same President of the Council. For years past his name has been a sort of "Aunt Sally" for abuse. His public acts—his measures—his motives—even his private affairs and character have not escaped the breath of calumny. But the Hon. Gentleman has thus far survived it all and given the lie to his assailants.—Measuring him by the past, and by nothing so much as his conduct during the last few weeks, we look upon him as a true friend to good government and an able and fearless exposer and opponent of corruption and the persistent and faithful friend of Upper Canada.

He is now as it were—on his trial. Having gained a high place in the estimation of the representative party of Western Canada, —the reward of many years of laborious faithfulness,—he now stands before the searching eyes of his country, in a position where he must be supported by the strongest mental powers, the most incessant zeal, the keenest penetration, and the purest motives to preserve his reputation and make manifest his sincerity.

We look to the future, feeling that the door is now opened to a change for the better in our constitution, and hoping that the plan suggested may, when expanded into detail, prove as feasible and expedient as it appears upon general principles. Until the subject of a federation is more fully considered and better understood, we are content with the earnest given, and feel that a fair trial should be accorded to the new Government, and that any other course would be grossly unpatriotic.

THE PROVINCIAL EXHIBITION.

We have just received a copy of the pamphlet containing the list, regulations, etc., for the Provincial Exhibition. The exhibition will be opened for four days, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, the 27th, 28th, 29th and 30th September. Interested parties will bear in mind that all entries must be made on or before the following dates: Horses, cattle, sheep, swine, poultry, August 27th; grain, field roots, and other farm productions, agricultural implements, machinery and manufactures generally, September 3rd; horticultural products, ladies' work, and fine arts, etc., September 17th. Non-members will be admitted on either one of the four days for 25 cts. On Monday 26th September and Saturday, 1st October, none will be admitted except the Society's officers and others who may have business. The usual ploughing match will come off somewhere near Hamilton on Tuesday, 27th September. The prize list is as varied as could well be expected. The prizes vary from one to forty dollars—a good proportion being in the neighborhood of the latter figure.

THE CROPS.—The long protracted drought under which this section of the country has laboured seemed to threaten the destruction of the crops, which have suffered very much for want of rain. The long delayed showers of this week have been greatly welcomed, and will, no doubt effect much good, and we hope in consequence of them to hear more cheering accounts from the farmers.

MR. BROWN has been re-elected for South Oxford by acclamation. He met a most enthusiastic reception at the hustings. His conduct throughout the present trying circumstances of the country was fully endorsed, and the electors of South Oxford not only afford him the fullest confidence but their warmest sympathies.

TWELFTH OF JULY.

ORANGE CELEBRATION!

The anniversary of the battle of the Boyne was, on Tuesday, celebrated at Port Hope by a large gathering of Orangemen from Northumberland, East Durham and Peterborough. As early as two o'clock in the morning the good folks of Peterborough were turned from their chambers by the booming of cannon, continued at intervals until old Sol made his appearance. Shortly after five in the morning the shrill notes of the fife and the louder sounding drum, added to the former; and from all quarters men in the regalia of the Order began to pour into the Town. They met near the Orange Hall, on the Market Square. The Peterborough Brass Band were on duty shortly after seven o'clock and filled the air with "The Protestant Boys" and other appropriate tunes. After transacting some business, the various Lodges to the number of about three hundred formed a line of procession, and with banners flying marched to the Railway Station. The cars were finely decorated, and were soon filled with the Orangemen, their wives and sweethearts, and a numerous party of pleasure-seekers.

The arrangements of the Railway Company were excellent, and the whole party proceeded on their way with the prospect of a good day's enjoyment. At Fraserville they were joined by two Lodges and their bands; and on arriving at Millbrook they found two other trains, also filled with members of the Order. Together the three trains wended their way to Port Hope, and we have been informed that seldom has a more imposing sight been seen than the entry of these three trains into Port Hope. The Cars were decorated with evergreens, and had flags flying in all directions. The various bands playing and ever and anon the cannon which was placed on the engine sent forth its booming note. Port Hope was crowded; Orangemen and sight seers from all quarters thronged the streets.

On leaving the train the Orangemen formed a procession and marched to the Market Square to join the members of the Association belonging to the county of East Durham. After which all marched to the Grand Trunk Railway Station to welcome the brethren from North umberland county, who soon made their appearance headed by their fine band. The whole procession was now formed and marched through the principal streets of Port Hope and thence to Smith's Grove, when a number of addresses were delivered by the leading Orangemen. They then separated for a short time and the various lodges went to find refreshments at the different hotels, and after fortifying the inner man, again met about half past three o'clock, and accompanyed each other to the different stations, when all left for home well pleased with the days proceedings. The Town of Port Hope was finely decorated, flags were flying every where in the line of procession, and the Orangemen of the town had erected a fine arch on the bridge on Walton street. On the return of the train containing the various Peterborough lodges, they marched through the principal streets once more, and having spent one of the pleasantest days they have experienced for a long time, disbanded to meet again next TWELFTH.

The Chemong Lake Railway.

We think it needs very little argument to demonstrate the propriety in the interests of the Town of Peterborough of completing this short line of Railway. The large amount of money already expended and which is being rapidly increased by the accumulations of interest on the sum invested— the short span of the distance from the present northern limits of the constructed portion to Bridgenorth—the beneficial influence upon the back country of having a speedy means of access to it by rail and steamboat—the increase likely to accrue to the trade of Peterborough from thus directly tapping the Bobcaygeon road by a comparatively easy means—and from the lumber trade and carriage which would follow the nearest outlet and be diverted to this route—all seem to urge those interested to make an effort, to have this line of Railway completed and made available to these ends.

There is perhaps no Town in Canada which at the present time bids fairer for the future than Peterborough. Its unlimited water power, its surrounding agricultural interests, and its vast northern resources, which are every day becoming more and more apparent, all assure us of the natural strength of Peterborough as a commercial centre, and to enlarge its borders and build it up to the full extent of the means within reach, should be the aim of those who have a regard for its welfare. To do this, we must have instant and ceaseless effort at all times, of course, tempered by prudent discretion.

The friends of Peterborough must rejoice at the action taken for the opening of a leading county road north from Buckhorn.—The back Townships are fast rising in importance and increasing in population. A good road will do much to aid the settlement of the section through which it passes, and a line of communication by rail and water to the present boundary road already to a great extent settled upon—would also tend to enhance the value for settlement of the country into which it opens—and both roads thus leading into Peterborough would necessarily promote its growth. Water always finds its own level, and trade will flow in those channels which command it.

It may be said that a hope is entertained of having railway communication north upon the proposed road from Buckhorn—admitting it—a hope we heartily join in—it does not in any way diminish the reasons for the completion of the road to Chemong Lake, which during the years that must elapse before a railroad could be established by way of Buckhorn, would give the back country an immediate benefit, and ultimately afford Peterborough a handsome return.

Again, it may be argued that the Chemong Lake road would build up Bridgenorth to the prejudice of Peterborough. No doubt it would help the former place, but it would not we apprehend operate against the interests of our own Town. Both the termini of the road would no doubt profit, but the larger one being so much in advance of the other and so commanding by reason both of the capital centered there and the immense strength naturally possessed by it—its northern rival, if such it could be called, would at best only increase its importance by becoming its respectable outpost.

REV. LACHLIN TAYLOR.—We learn by the N. Y. Herald that the Rev. Lachlin Taylor, of Canada, has had the honorary degree of D. D., conferred upon him by the University of New York.

FATAL ACCIDENT ON THE RIVER.

On Wednesday in last week a man named Thomas Sanderson, an inhabitant of the village of Lakefield, was washed off a crib below the dam nearly opposite which, his own house was situated, and drowned.

The "running" had for some time previously been somewhat dangerous owing to the lowness of the river; but it is to be apprehended that whiskey had more to do with Sanderson's death than water, inasmuch as he was known to be a good swimmer, and known equally to be a hard drinker; and it is the prevailing opinion of those acquainted with him, and with all the circumstances of the accident, that had he been sober he might have been saved.

There is an old Latin "axe," the English of which is that nothing but good should be spoken or written of the dead. This is a saying the soundness of which we could never appreciate. We cannot but think that example is better than precept and that while it behoves ourselves to set a good example to others, it is generally incumbent upon us to warn or to encourage by recalling after death, the vices as well as the virtues of the departed.

A widow and several children, totally unprovided for, are, at all events, objects of commiseration, and we venture to suggest that a few dollars, should any of our readers be disposed to render assistance in their behalf, could scarcely be better employed than by "visiting," in a pecuniary form "the widow and the fatherless in their affliction."

About a week anterior to the above recorded accident a "crib" broke up at the same slide, and a Frenchman, clinging to a single stick, had his leg jammed between the timber and the rocks, and broken: he is now lying at Blakley's Hotel in the village, well cared for, and in a fair way of recovery.

No "cribs" can now run down entire, and whatever timber is started from Lake Katchewahsconkah, and there is still a large quantity in the lake, has to be sent down, like saw logs, in single sticks.

We have heard that since writing the above, July 9th, the body of Sanderson was found, on Saturday, in "the Pond" immediately above Hughson's dam.

The water at Young's dam has been headed back, and the cribs are running down again to-day, July 11, though not without risk.

THE ELECTIONS.—The nominations for the elections consequent upon the recent re-construction of the Cabinet take place as follows: South Oxford, Monday, July 11; South Ontario, Monday, July 18; North Ontario, Tuesday, July 19.

HON. O. MOWAT.—The Whitby Gazette says: "Mr. Mowat has, since his recent return from Quebec, been laboring under severe indisposition; it is thought, however, that he will have so far recovered as to be able to meet his numerous friends in South Ontario before many days. We most sincerely hope that he may.

We beg to call the attention of intending settlers to the advertisement in to-days issue of the Canadian Land and Emmigration Company. The land on their allotments, we are informed, is of first rate quality. The climate from the immense number of little lakes, mild and agreeable. The inducements to settlers are numerous and the encouragement offered by the Company of the most paternal nature—plenty of work at remunerative rates will be afforded and long time given for paying up.

THE HON. MR. MCDOUGAL is to be opposed as we said in our last. The feeling gains ground that the Opposition will not amount to much. Nearly all the Conservative papers in the Province, with exception of the Leader and True Witness, are favorable to his return. Indeed under the present circumstances, when "measures not men" is the order of the day, we cannot see how any man who is willing to support the Ministry can conscientiously oppose the return of Mr. McDougal. He is considered necessary to the carrying out of the scheme of Federation, and ought to get trying his hand; as soon as this is accomplished oppose him as much as they please.

FATAL ACCIDENT IN MITCHELL.—On Thursday last a distressing accident occurred in Mitchell, by which Mr. Fred. Dutton, a druggist, lately of Stratford, lost his life.—Deceased had been out on the mill-dam shooting in a boat. The boat leaked and was put into shore when the deceased got out. In attempting to drag the gun out after him the lock caught upon the seat and the gun went off, the contents entering his leg below the knee, blowing off the knee cap and so mutilating the thigh that it was found necessary to amputate the limb, from the effects of which he died on Friday. He leaves a wife and we believe two children, together with a large circle of friends, to mourn his untimely end. The lamented young man, who was but 25 years of age, was buried on Sunday last with Masonic and Military honors. About 200 people, including the masonic fraternity and two military companies, arrived by special train from Stratford, where they were joined by a number of the masonic fraternity of Seaforth, Clinton, Egmondville and St. Mary's.—St. Mary's Argus.

THE German Society are advertising for the recovery of a child that, at the accident at the Belmil Bridge, clasped the neck of one of the immigrants, not a relative, and, in its terror, refused to let go its hold till they arrived at Montreal. Some person, speaking German, but whether or not an immigrant is uncertain, here came to the man to whom the child thus clung, and offered him half a dollar for it. He thereupon took the offer and gave up the child, which since then has not been heard of. Another, a little boy, now at the Protestant Orphan Asylum, and whose parents and relatives seem to have perished, has been adopted by a respectable married couple who have no children of their own. A legal agreement will be signed, that the child be brought up as their own, a tutor being appointed in course of law, the interest from any indemnity from the Grand Trunk to be appropriated to the education of the child, which is said to be the same that was found asleep in the wreck of a car after all others had been removed.

THE Leader announces that Mr. Matthew Crooke Cameron is to oppose the Hon. Wm. Macdougall in North Ontario. Let him go in and—lose—by all means. He tries it this time under tremendous disadvantages, and will most assuredly be beaten. The announcement, as made by the Leader, is in regular official form; and we suppose that journal may be accepted as the accredited organ of the New Opposition.— Hamilton Times.

OUR LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

London, June 20th.

At present public attention is all directed to the

DANISH QUESTION.

More excitement prevails on this question than on any other topic—people are taking sides, and a wide spread feeling begins to obtain that before many days England will be at war. The feeling at present seems to be for the Queen or for the Prince of Wales. The mass are not slow to declare that Lord John is allowing his deference for a widowed monarch to carry him too far, and the fact that Her Majesty lives in the greatest seclusion and seldom takes any part in public affairs, militates very much against her influence. The winning manners, too, of the Princess are beginning to tell, and there are no two opinions held as to the amount of influence this fair lady exercises over her husband—his sympathy being also with the Danes.

THE CONFERENCE

Has just broken up, and has accomplished nothing. The English people, slow to move, have all along been peaceably inclined, but latterly a change has been observable. France has been too much for Palmerston and Earl Russell; and the feeling that French Councils have prevailed most, at the various meetings of the high contracting powers, has aggravated the anti-German mania very much. Why should the Kinsmen of our Princess be imposed upon? is the question everyone asks; and the feeling of sympathy with the weaker side is beginning to strengthened day by day. Already the working men are holding meetings in advocacy of Denmarks interests; and there is no doubt that Palmerston must yield to the war feeling or his majority in the House will grow much less than nothing. It must be difficult for the old gentleman to defend himself against the well made and well supported attacks of the Tory party; the more so as it is well known that the plucky old fellow privately leans to the Danish side. When the House meets there can be no excuse offered for not giving full explanations as to the hive and why the Conference failed; and it will be difficult, I conceive, for the Ministry to continue the line of conduct they have hitherto carried out.

"HURRAH FOR DENMARK!"

Already it thrills through every nerve. The Prince and Princess paid a visit, a few days ago, to Cambridge. They were received with the most unbounded enthusiasm, and "Hurrah for Denmark!" was the universal cry. In the Convocation Hall the students, sons of the elite of England, raised the cry, and the grave Dons and Reverend Doctors sent back the echo. Handkerchiefs and hats were waved, and it is said so overcome was the Princess that she shed tears. When they left the city, the same cry was sounded in their ears, and the telegraph had borne the story before them—for at every station on the railroad the same feeling was manifested, and "Hurrah for Denmark!" has become almost a household word. Mens better judgment will be warped for the ladies who are proverbially above reason are enlisted in the cause, and the Danish dresses and Danish colours are the order of the day.

WHAT THE PAPERS SAY.

The Times says that English honor demands that if it must be war the Angles and the Danes must fight side by side. England has been advising Denmark all along—she must aid her substantially now. The Daily Telegraph demands that the people must and compel the Government to declare themselves on the side of the Danes. Some of the rest declare that the honor of our country demands that we should assist our ally. Others cry "shame! why should two immense countries like Prussia and Austria gobble up poor Denmark?" No doubt the feeling that we must afford material aid has gained ground immensly during the last forty days; almost all the papers are in favor of it, and those that were bitterly opposed to it formerly now say nothing against it, if they do not argue in its favor.

THE "ALABAMA."

You must have learned long ere this reaches you that the famous cruisier, the Alabama, has at last met her desert. Peace to her ashes—she is no more. The gallant little bark was a bone of contention for a long time. Had she hailed from a Confederate port, I believe that almost everyone would have been sorry for her loss. As it is, I believe that her destruction is a great relief to many of the friends of the South. No one ever felt certain as to the result of her depredations; they were extensive, and, in a measure, sui generis. She had never been in a Southern harbour, and she never sent a captured vessel to be condemned. Everyone hopes that the next vessel Semmes commands will be one that has at least touched at some Southern port—and then no false shame will prevent a general rejoicing at his gallant deeds. From all I can learn, the Alabama was never a match for the Kearsage; and though originally far her superior in speed she had got so thoroughly out of repair after her long cruise that the advantage was all on the side of the Kearsage. The French would not allow her to refit. Mr. Dayton's influence at Paris since the American-Mexican conversion being paramount. It was reported that the Kearsage was iron-plated; this is not so; the only precaution taken beside great strength in her construction was to warp all her chains round her sides as some prevention from the shot. This leads me to speak of the feeling concerning

THE AMERICAN WAR.

In reply to your question, whether in the best informed circles at home it is believed the South will ever be subjugated by the North, I say, without hesitation, No. The impression seems to prevail that the North is playing a loosing game. A growing desire seems to gain ground to realize even at considerable loss on all American investments, and that a crisis in their financial affairs is imminent, no one doubts. A gentleman to whom I showed your letter yesterday said: "Conquer the South! no; more likely the South conquer them! I bet," says he, "that before a month their almighty dollar is not worth eighteen pence." I have an idea that the earliest conflict between England and France will only be established by some mediation in America, and that a refusal to accept that mediation by the North will be followed by a recognition of the South. The reckless mode in which the war has been carried on—the lying bulletins and heartless speculation and extravagance every where manifested in the States, has alienated many true friends. Grant seems a persevering fellow—different from all their former generals; but he has yet to learn that more battles have been gained by strategy than by hard fighting. He cannot handle so many men. Lee appears to be a commmander General, and is, by every one here, acknowledged the greatest General of the age.

Dr. Gabbie has resigned his charge, ill health the cause. His departure of all classes are wanting to present him with a testimonial. Already £200 has been subscribed and there is a prospect of its being more than doubled. Some of the best names in the Established Church are on the Committee. This speaks well for the Scottish churches as a body of christians.

I had intended to have written you a long yarn about our old hosts, but my letter has already exceeded its limits, and I must delay till again.

THE CROPS.

We make a few extracts from our exchanges, showing the condition and prospects of the crops in different localities. In the township of Arthur crops of almost every description have suffered much from the blighting influence of the late frosts. There is scarcely any fruit to be seen, and the wheat, oat and barley crops presented a very poor appearance up to last Sunday, when the refreshing rains then and since have caused drooping shoots to look more luxuriantly.

The Huron Signal says:—"The drought is becoming daily more alarming. The ground was so thoroughly soaked with rain late in the spring that the present unusual dry weather has baked it hard, and very soon, we greatly fear, the spring wheat, upon which so much dependance is placed, will be beyond redemption. The fall wheat stands the drought better, and in some places promises a fair yield. Turnips and other late crops are, of course, out of the question, unless we have rain very soon."

The Waterloo Chronicle says:—"In this immediate vicinity we have had no rain for the last five weeks. For the last few weeks the weather has also been extremely hot, so that the earth has become as dry as ashes for a good distance below the surface of the ground. The result is, that the hay crop will be very nearly a total failure, and the spring crops do not promise much better. Oats and spring wheat make a very poor appearance around here."

The Leader says: "Accounts reach us daily, from nearly all parts of the country, of the great injury caused to the wheat crop by that destructive insect, the midge, which has infested the wheat fields of Canada for so many years, and which it appears impossible to destroy. Last Wednesday, while Messrs. Gooderham and Worts of this city, were proceeding from Pine Grove village to the village of Meadowvale, in Toronto township, they examined no less than twenty-five fields of wheat within a distance of fifteen miles, and took a sample—a small bunch—from each field, and laid them before us yesterday, that we might judge for ourselves, from personal observation, of the fearful nature of the damage caused by the midge to the wheat. The result of an examination is truly alarming, for instead of finding a sound, healthy kernel in the ears of wheat, nothing was to be seen but living worms or insects. Out of the hundreds of ears of wheat gathered, it may be safely stated that perhaps a dozen grains could not be found. The insects were so numerous in the cavities where the grains should be that they could be shaken out in thousands. If the rest of the crops in the twenty-five fields from which these samples were obtained turn out to be equally damaged not a single bushel of wheat will be obtained from that large tract this season.

The Galt Reporter regrets to learn that the wheat pest has made its appearance in great numbers in Beverly and South Dumfries, and in some places of our neighborhood. In the vicinity of the village of Troy, Beverly, we are informed that the fields are literally covered with this destructive insect, and of course the wheat is suffering in proportion."

"We are sorry" says the "New Market Era to learn that the farmers in all directions, are complaining of the Midge destroying their wheat,—even worse than on previous years. Mr. S. Wilkin, of Bogarttown, took no less than 471 from a single head, and says it is all affected more or less.

THE INVASION OF MARYLAND.

The telegraphic despatches this morning are more than usually interesting. The Confederate movement into Maryland is on a larger scale than was generally supposed. Instead of being a mere raid, it turns out to be a formidable invasion which carries consternation and danger into the heart of Washington and cities further north. It was so well conceived, however, that up to Saturday the Federals had but little idea of its real character and affected to treat it with contempt. Since then the Confederates have advanced with rapidity, occupied Frederick, fought a battle at Monocasy river spanned by an important railroad bridge that has been destroyed, defeated General Siegel's forces and captured a thousand prisoners, and then pursued the flying federals towards Baltimore, within four miles of which city they had arrived at last accounts. The inhabitants of Baltimore—much of them as remain "loyal"—were summoned yesterday to man the defences, and serious apprehensions appear to be felt as to the safety of the city. These are not lessened by the fact that the Confederates have possession of the railroad north of the place, thus preventing reinforcements reaching it from that quarter. We have nothing later from the city than up to seven o'clock last night, and it is possible that this morning it is in possession of the Southern troops.

The movement has been well conceived and, so far, well executed. Almost every available soldier in the North has been sent off to Gen. Grant, leaving Baltimore, Washington and other ports but slightly garrisoned. If the Confederates push on with energy they may do incalculable damage to the North before troops can be gathered together to drive them back. Already they have done well, and a few more days of active work may ensure them the final victory beyond the possibility of failure.

The story that Hunter has reoccupied Martinsburg and captured a thousand Confederates, is given on the authority of a Philadelphia paper, which is enough to determine its untruthfulness, without further enquiry. There is little probability of Hunter being able to reach the scene of hostilities for a week to come.—Leader.

ACCIDENT TO THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON.—The Paris correspondent of the New York News says on the 10th inst., that the talk of the evening was an accident which happened on the 9th inst., to the Emperor at Fontainebleau, whether he went on Tuesday. He was on the lake in a little quick is boat, which was upset; and, in getting him out, either from awkwardness with an oar or from the balancing of the boat, he received a knock on the head. Some of the evening papers speak of the accident, but they only make the thing look more serious. The Bourse has gone down on it, for it is known that he is to-day confined to bed. A cold bath, without the adjunct of a blow, is a serious thing in this inclement weather, for it is now cold and rainy.

HORRIBLE MASSACRE.—We learn from the Victoria Chronicle, of the 17th ult., that an exploring party of 17 white men were attacked early on the morning of the 30th April, while they were asleep, by Chilkecoten Indians, and all slaughtered except three, who escaped. The three surviving men arrived at Victoria by the steamer "Emily Harris" on the 12th ult. Two of them were wounded but not seriously, the other escaped unhurt. The dead bodies of their unfortunate victims were shockingly mutilated by the Indians, whose object in committing the massacre seems to have been plunder. A French Canadian named Baptiste Demorest was one of the murdered men. Grave apprehensions were entertained concerning the fate of eight or nine men of the same expedition, who were known to be within reach of the savages.

A SCATHING ARTICLE.

"MR. BROWN'S RECANTATION."

From the Leader.

"We have before dealt, complimented and reprobated; we have been thanked by friends by suspicious embassy trains; we have been assailed by attacks and denunciations of Ministerial subsidy and corruption; we have been told by every Grit journal in the land, indeed, have almost all that good Irish nerves, well strengthened with leather and iron-wax, were ever intended to combat. But we had not nerve to resist the fearful effects of Mr. Brown's belt into the bottomless pit dug for him by those rascally pens of Jack-the-giant-killers, John A. and Cartier. When we think of the political bloodshed which that pen has produced in this fine county; when we remember that he has devastated wide acres, and, for ten long years, has been sending misery and woe into homes which were once happy; when we reflect upon the lengthy list of crimes attached to his horrible name; when we call to mind the heartless manner in which that very man strode, as if with seven-league boots, through Upper Canada —destroying the peace of mind of the people, and outravelling, with his terrible howls, the vexest night-hawk. When we think of all this, and know that he committed all such villiany for the professed sake of those objects which he has now abandoned, we certainly feel like erasing our accusation, throwing down our pen, putting out the fire of the engine, stopping the presses, and discontinuing the publication of the Leader.—Certainly, if the people of Upper Canada continue to harbour Mr. George Brown amongst them, we will think seriously of this mode of retribution and revenge. What business has Mr. Brown, any way, in this country, while James Resty is here to protect the rights of the Province, and defend the British Constitution?

For the life of us we cannot see the use of Mr. Brown or the Globe in Canada. As for the proprietor of the Leader, he seldom sleeps, so anxious as he is about the country, so worried is he with the Brown family; and the only remedy which a good and true Christian man, like the founder of this paper, has, within legal reach, is the passing of the passage of a Bill through Parliament exiling the Browns forever to the Red River territory. We ask, and we, the Toronto Leader, have a right to ask, will this great, flourishing, this growing country, any longer tolerate such a man? We believe we understand the feeling of Upper Canada, and we declare advisedly, that this luscious West will put up no more with the political pestilence which the Browns are continually wafting over our beautiful corn fields, tainting, perpetually, the virtuous atmosphere of Upper Canada."

LOSS OF THE "ALABAMA."

The brave corsair, which has so long sustained the reputation of the Southern Confederacy at sea, has, at last, met her end. It would seem, from the first despatch, that while in Cherbourg, the great French dock-yard, a challenge was sent her commander by the captain of the Federal war-ship Kearsage, and that Capt. Semmes accepted the challenge. A later despatch says it was Semmes, who, on being ordered out of port upon the demand of Mr. Dayton, that sent the challenge to the Kearsage. We are rather surprised at this; for however brave and daring Captain Semmes may be, he has always shown a good deal of discretion. More than once he avoided an encounter with the Vanderbilt, fearing his superior strength. The Alabama was a wooden vessel, sheeted with copper, and her superiority lay in her speed rather than in the weight of her guns. In this respect she seems to have suffered of late, and was, therefore, no equal to a vessel carrying two one-hundred pounders, as the Kearsage did. The fight lasted during an hour and twenty minutes, at the end of which time the Alabama sank. Captain Semmes, and 13 officers and 17 men were taken off by the English yacht Deerhound, and landed at Cherbourg. The number killed on board the Alabama was six, one officer and one man were drowned, and one officer and 16 men wounded. Sixty-eight of the crew fell into the hands of the Federal victors.—Leader.

THE New York Herald has letters from Newbern and Beaufort, N. C., giving a variety of facts concerning the business of blockade running, and saying that while the people of the Northern States are occasionally edified with reading accounts of the capture of a valuable prize, gentlemen who have carefully and for a long period of time watched the operations of the blockading squadron are of opinion that just about one in forty of the vessels attempting to run the fearful gauntlet at Wilmington are captured; and that on some single night as many as ten or twelve steamers go in and out of port without suffering or molestion. One of the communications states that sometimes an outward bound craft, being chased by a blockader, will commence lightening by throwing cotton overboard, and that the blockaders subsequently do a good business by simply picking up the cotton thus cast away, as many as five hundred bales a month, having been picked up. The writer thinks a blockade runner has only to make one round trip to pay for two vessels and their cargoes, such as are the enormous profits of the illicit trade in which they are engaged. Only two blockade runners of trifling value had been taken at Wilmington during the fourteen weeks preceding the date of the letter referred to.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—About 11 o'clock on Saturday forenoon a melancholy and fatal accident occurred on Queen Street, near the corner of Yonge street, by which a little boy of about five years of age, son of Mr. Thomas Curran, blacksmith, Queen street, was killed by being run over by one of the street railway cars. It appears that the child was playing on the street, and while attempting to run across the track was accidentally knocked down by a horse that was being ridden along the track a short distance before the cars, and before the driver of the latter had time to put on the brakes the wheels passed over the child's head and instantly killed him. The rider of the horse it appears, was so terrified at the accident that he rode away, and has not since been heard of, he being unknown to the police. The driver of the car, William Courtney, was arrested by order of the Chief of Police, and was present at the inquest which was convened on the body on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock, by Coroner Hallowell, at the Bank Saloon, corner of Queen and Yonge streets.—Leader.

MADELINE SMITH.—Some time ago it was mentioned that Madeleine Smith had got married, and occasionally attended divine service along with the husband in a church not a hundred miles from the town of Linlithgow. After the trial her father and mother and the other members of the family left Blythswood square, and took up house in a rural district near Linlithgow, where Madeline got married to a mother, who felt a tender passion for herself and pity for her condition. He got an appointment in an institution in one of the leading seaport towns in the south of England. Thither Madeline and her husband proceeded, and for a time seemed to be in the enjoyment of connubial felicity. But it oozed out that she was no less a personage than Madeline Smith, and the scandal became so strong that the husband was compelled to leave his situation. They then proceeded to a smaller town in England, where, at a much reduced salary, Madeline's husband got another situation; but here, too, her sin found her out, and her husband fell into a melancholy mood and died. Madeline was not long in following her spouse, and died recently, it is said, of a broken heart.—Inverness Advertiser.

THE Globe says that Mr. McDougall left on Friday for Upper Canada—intending to meet his constituents at once. The writ for his riding was sent to Sheriff Reynolds, of Whitby. Mr. Cartier also left for Montreal.

Destructive Fire at Hamilton!

LOSS OVER $100,000.

HAMILTON, July 9th.

About three o'clock this morning, the citizens of Hamilton were aroused from their slumbers by the continuous ringing of the fire bell and a blaze of light which rendered everything as clear as noonday. Upon looking at the enormous blaze which appeared in the west end of the city, all knew that the establishment of Edgar & Melville, (the Jacques & Hay of Hamilton,) was on fire, and that every effort would be required to prevent the whole of the neighbourhood from being destroyed. Accordingly, nearly everybody turned out to render aid to those whose property was in such danger. The fire was the work of an incendiary. It broke out in the centre of the main building, and soon considerable distance from the furnace. The men had all left off work at four o'clock on Saturday afternoon, being about 11 hours before the fire. From the start it was seen that it was beyond all human effort to prevent the whole establishment from being burned, as the material inside was of the most combustible nature, from the fact of a consignage, sash and blind, planing, carpenter, cabinet and blacksmith's business being driven therein with energy by the proprietors, and that oils, varnish, paints, &c., in great quantity, were stored within it. In about fifteen minutes after the fire first appeared the whole immense building was wrapped in flames, and firemen and citizens were doing their best to protect the surrounding houses. The houses occupied by Mr. Herald, Mr. Ross, Mr. Kirkpatrick, Mr. Mr. Greening and Mr. Sharpe, of the Great Western, were all very much threatened but were not much injured, thanks to the waterworks and willing hands. Mr. Sharpe lost considerable through the removal of his furniture, but it is fully covered by insurance. Mr. Herald's loss amounts to about five hundred dollars. The loss of Mr. Thomas White, who owns two of the houses, will probably amount to one thousand dollars. He is fully insured in the Niagara District Mutual. Edgar and Melville's stock was low, and therefore their loss was less than it would have been had it occurred some time ago. The lumber, staves, shingles, barrels, timber, &c., were in a yard near at hand, and were saved by great exertions. Their loss amounts to eighty thousand dollars, has fifteen thousand dollars insurance, being all the companies would risk upon the property. Many of the men had their tools in the shops and, of course, lost all. One poor fellow is said to have lost six hundred dollars worth. There are one hundred men thrown out of employment by the fire.—Edgar & Melville have lost all the workings of a lifetime. They had only completed the building last year, and were but getting comfortably under way when the hand of Providence smote them, and in less than an hour derived them of what they had laboured long and industriously to accumulate. They are deserving of the consideration of the people of Hamilton, many of whom can very easily afford to loan them sufficient means to again get fairly under way in life, and confer benefit upon the city to no great an extent as during the past year.—Globe.

CAPT. SEMMES' REPORT.

Captain Semmes, in his official report of the engagement with the Kersage, says:—When about a mile distant he opened with solid shot. The Kersage replied in a few minutes, and the engagement became active. The two ships steamed around a common centre, preserving a distance from each other of from a quarter to half a mile. When within good range he opened with shell. In ten or three minutes the Alabama's spanker gaff was shot away, and her ensign came down. This was immediately replaced by another at the mizzen mast head. The firing now became very hot, and the enemy's shot and shell soon began to tell on our men, knocking down, killing and disabling a number of them in different parts of the ship. Perceiving that our shells though hitting did but little damage, resort was had to solid shot and shell. After the lapse of about an hour our ship was in a sinking condition, the enemy's shell having exploded in our side and between decks, opening large apertures through which the water rushed with great rapidity. For some minutes I had hopes of being able to reach the French coast, for which purpose I gave the ship all steam and set such of the fore and aft sails as were available. The ship filled so rapidly, however, that before we had made much progress the fires were extinguished in the furnaces, and we were evidently on the point of sinking. I now hauled down my colours to prevent further destruction of life, and despatched a boat to inform the enemy of our condition. He says that the Kersage fired upon him five times after his colours were struck. The remainder of the report is devoted to a statement of how he was picked up and made his escape under a neutral flag; also that his officers, when they went to the Kersage, found that she had been furnished with a chain armour, concealed with planking, that the planking was torn off by his shells thus exposing to view the armour. He also says the enemy was heavier than himself both in ship, battery and crew, but did not know until the action was over that she was iron-clad. The armour consisted, it proves, of a double row of chains strung along the sides of the Kersage, a temporary and not very formidable protection to her machinery, and from all accounts the Kersage could have withstood the wild firing of the Alabama a whole day; whereas the firing of the Kersage, according to Semmes, was so hot and accurate in ten or fifteen minutes after the commencement of the action, that his flag was shot away, his hull torn, and his men knocked down, killed and disabled in all directions.

The Paris correspondent of the Commercial says that Captain Winslow will claim Semmes as his prisoner, and will write to him to deliver himself up, making it a personal affair between officer and officer. Winslow will send the other officers home. The men are released on parole to never fight against the United States.

Semmes was ordered out by the French authorities by noon.

CANADIAN VICTIMS TO THE WAR.—A young man named Robert Murphy went to the United States from Prescott a couple of years since, and was drafted into the Federal army in St. Lawrence county last fall. Before he could prove the fact of his still being a British subject, he was put into a regiment and sent off to the seat of war. Intelligence has reached Prescott that he was shot through the head, and instantly killed, during the of the late engagements. A merchant of this city, who once taught a school in Sourrington, states that of four brothers who attended his school, three of them, having gone to the United States, have been killed in battle, and of two sons of a wealthy farmer in one of the united counties, one of them has left his bones to bleach on a Northern battlefield, and the other has recently returned home maimed and crippled for life. These are but a few out of some thousands of instances of a similar character which may never become known.—Kingston News.

THE BRITISH NAVY.—The question has been often asked whether the Navy of Great Britain, meaning as it does over six thousand guns, and manned by 75,000 sailors, exceeds the navies of France and the United States, or France and Russia, and were it not that we might be considered a little egotistical we should say it would exceed them altogether, but it is useless speculating upon this when there are other questions that do not admit of any doubt, no one after using the 'Canadian Pain Destroyer' doubts its being the very best thing for the cure of coughs colds, sore throat, diptheria, pains in the stomach, sides and back, spinal affections, &c. Sold by all Medicine Dealers at 25 cts per bottle.

A RAILWAY FREIGHT-and strong hollow would carry ten persons and baggage, across the plains, from Windsor to Quebec 200 miles in ten hours; thus what a saving of time and toil. And so with Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers—one stops a cough, a dozen heals a sore throat, and a box will cure the most obstinate cold. 25 c

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE

TRENT DIVISION

GENTLEMEN:

An Election will take place on September or October next, when you will be called upon to choose a Member to represent the Trent Division.

Having been elected by your confidence in 1857 to fill up the unexpired time occasioned by the decease of the late Hon. R. Hamond, and the resignation of the Hon. Sidney Smith, I have during the past years devoted as much of my time as it was possible for me to do in attending the two Sessions of Parliament, and also in attending to the request of each of the constituents on every case in so honor me with their local and other matters, not immediately connected with Parliamentary duties.

We are about beginning a new era in the history of the politics of our country. The present move in the formation of a Ministry who pledge themselves to keep the feuds of the past, and to work together for the general good of the country, by bringing such measures before the next Session of Parliament as will tend to a final settlement of the sectional difficulties between Upper and Lower Canada, demands our serious consideration.

I may be permitted to state that I shall accord to them a fair trial, and whether in or out of Parliament, to assist by every means in my power the consummation of so desirable an object; trusting that Upper Canada may receive that which she is justly entitled to, and that both Provinces will be greatly benefitted by the change.

I have concluded from the numerous personal requests, as also by letters from many parts of the Division, to again place myself at the disposal of the Electors, and if again honored with your confidence, to discharge the trust committed to me in as satisfactory a manner as possible.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,

Yours &c. &c.

FLIRTING WITH THE GIRLS.

Among the many pleasant ways
Of getting rid of time,
There never, sure, was pleasanter
Than that which kindly lay Hymn,
There's plenty of excitement in't
To keep a man awake,
And fun sufficient to reward
All trouble you may take.

If you are fond of change you know,
(A wonderful to see!)
How to buy to say the word, and lo!
You're free upon the spot,
And should the maidens prove bad sticks
At you her jetty curls,
You're but to say "my dear, I see
But flirting with the girls."

You hope she will not break her heart—
"Twould be a thing so sad!
And yet "twould show the girl possessed
Of taste that wasn't bad.
You little think the merry sprite
Was flirting with you too,
And laughs to think you thought she cared
A single straw for you.

Yon darling little maiden sweet,
Just freed from books and school,
So simple, you are sure she went
Be very hard to fool.
She seems so completely taken;
Your gladness had wit,
Comfort with that moustache they've made
A most decided hit.

You call her "verdant" thinking not
She knows you "like a book,"
And that before you are aware,
She'll have you on a "hook."
You dub her "unsuspecting chit;"
Perhaps you'll change your mind,
She's not so very verdant, sir,
As you will shortly find.

You carry her to balls and seats;
Her dancing is divine;
Her manners frank and artless, and
Her toilet very fine;
And very soon—you hardly thought
Your game could so miscarry—
She's flirting with your friends,
Sir Tom, and Dick, and Harry.

Hiring a Cook.

Mrs. J—— was called at Madame Thompson's "Emporium for Female Domestic Help, Assistants, and General Agency for Urban and Suburban Families of Gentility," and asked for a cook. Presently was ushered into the reception room a gorgeously dressed woman, of masculine proportions, who took a seat upon the sofa by the side of Mrs. Jones, and said:

"You wish a cook, do you?"

Mrs. Jones instigated that her wants were in that direction.

"Well, that's my line; I can do French, Italian or English cooking—anything but Yankee. I can make jellies, Char de Russe, pomme de terre, fricandeau, jibblatats, com-and go, ice cream, maccaroni, oyster sauce, espitre dotel, a la mode, picauti, and anything you like."

"What wages do you expect for all that?" meekly murmured Mrs. Jones.

"I have been having $12 a month, but things is rix now, so; why I had to give $3 50 a yard for this ere silk; and I should say I would have $25—Sundays to myself, and two evenings out in the week."

"Do you perform on the piano?" inquired the lady.

"No, I don't. I never heard it was wanted in cooking."

"Can you exterminate the antipenultimate of a defunct fowl?

"What do'e say?"

"Do you speak Hebrew, so as to teach the children German if they learn French?"

"No."

"You will not do for me; you can go."

And her cookship withdrew, with drooping colors.

A lady recently issued cards for a supper party, and had "No Butter" printed on them.

Whoever heard of a widower committing suicide on account of love? A little experience is wholesome.

"I am surprised, wife, at your ignorance, said a pompous fellow. "Have you never seen any books at all?" "Oh, yes," she replied, "in a number of cases."

On hearing a clergyman remark, "The world is full of change," Mrs. Partington said she could hardly bring her mind to believe it, so little found its way into her pocket.

When Mademoiselle Arnault, the actress, went to visit Voltaire, he said to her; "Ah! Mademoiselle, I am eighty-four years old, and I have committed as many fooleries." "Quite a trifle," replied the actress, "I am only forty, and have committed a thousand."

"Do you mean to insinuate that I lie, sir?" exclaimed a fierce-looking, mustachioed gentleman to a raw Yankee, who hinted some slight skepticism as to one of his toughest statements. "No, mister, not at all—only it kind o' strikes me that you are 'tarnal sarin' of truth."

"I wish you would not give me such short weight for my money," said a customer to a grocer; who had an outstanding bill against him. "And I wish you wouldn't give me such long wait for mine," replied the grocer.

A young gentleman having made some progress in acquiring a knowledge of Latin, addressed a few words to an organ-grinder in his purest accent, but was astonished at receiving the following response: "I don't speak Inglis."

"Ah," said Dr. Boomerang, meeting a patient, "I need not ask you the cause of your being out again; you followed my prescriptions." "No, I didn't, Doctor, if I had, my friends would have followed me to the grave."

THE undersigned, while thanking the public in general for the liberal patronage they have bestowed on him, since his commencement in business, begs to state that he continues to manufacture his celebrated

PATENT WATER-DRAWER!

AT BLYTHE MILLS.

You must remember that by buying one of my Water-drawers, you get your water pure, which you cannot do by a suction Pump. I warrant them NOT TO FREEZE, and to stand as long, if not longer, than any Pump; and, besides, you save over fifty per cent. I can sell them cheaper than any Pump-maker in Canada! If anything goes astray by fair play within one year from the time of purchase, I bind myself to re-place it; so you cannot be deceived. Now, any one who is in need of a Pump would do well to get one of my Water-drawers at once. I have two teams out at all times to deliver them, and persons residing at a distance will receive prompt attention by sending a letter to the undersigned

T. QUINNEY.

South Granby, C. W.
Mr. Henry R. Gray,
Chemist, Montreal.

Sir,—I am most happy to state that my wife used Henry's Vermont Liniment, having accidentally got a needle run under her finger nail, pain was beyond all bearing, but by using the Liniment, the pain was gone in a few minutes.

Yours very respectfully,
W. GIBSON.

Having on various occasions used your Liniment, I am happy to say that I have always found it beneficial. I have frequently used it for Bowel Complaint, and I have never known it to fail in effecting a cure. I think it the best medicine I ever used for Diarhœa summer complaint, and disorders of a similar character I have also found it a never failing specific for Colds, and for affections of the head. I always recommend it to my friends, and would not be without it in the house for any consideration.

VEGETABLE BALSAMIC

ELIXIR.

A CERTIFICATE

WORTH A MILLION.

An Old Physician's Testimony.

READ:

Waterbury, Vt.,
Nov. 24th, 1858.

Although I do not like the practice of Physicians recommending, indiscriminately, the patent medicines of the day: yet after a trial of ten years, I am free to admit that there is one medicine before the public that any Physician can use in his practice. And recommend to the public with perfect confidence; that medicine is Rev. N. H. Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

I have used it myself with the very best success, and now, whenever I am troubled with a Cough or Cold, I invariably use it. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are suffering from a Cold or a Cough, for the Croup, Whooping Cough, and all diseases tending to consumption, and to the Profession as a reliable article.

I am satisfied of its excellence beyond a doubt, having conversed personally with the Rev. N. H. Downs about it. He informed me of the principal ingredients of which the Elixir is composed, all of which are purely Vegetable and perfectly safe.

THE ROSE OF LANGLEY MOOR.

I ken a lass whose charms surpass,
In deadly aim the shafts of Teil;
How many hearts are pierced by darts,
Shot from the eyes of Betsie Bell.
I must confess some girls possess
More potent charms than any flower,
But many less than Bonnie Bess,
Th' blooming rose of Langley Moor.
My bonnie Bess, my smiling Bess,
Although I ken she is but poor,
Still goddess, I love sweet Bess,
Th' blooming rose of Langley Moor.

Her graceful air, her face sae fair,
Her dimpl'd cheek an' rosy mou',
Her flaxen hair, an' then a pair
O' laughing een, sae bonny blue:
Her waist like neck, without a speck,
For whiteness can the swans excel,
Th' flowers that deck th' Brownie Beds,
Bow down abashed to Betsie Bell.
My bonnie Bess, &c., &c.

In early spring when every thing
Puts on a green and lively dress,
When blackbirds sing, an' green woods ring
With anthems to my bonnie Bess.
O then I feel, I love sae weel,
That words have not the power to tell,
Nor has unusual, nor pen reveal
The love I bear to Betsie Bell.
My bonnie Bess, &c., &c.

I ken there's not another plot
Of country in a length'ned tour,
Where I could wot to cast my lot,
And be content, but Langley Moor.
Nor have we got in hall or cot,
In town or country, ding or dell,
In wood or grot, or other spot,
A bonnier lass than Betsie Bell,
Then this I say, come on't what may,
I'll wed sweet Bess, an' then I'm sure,
That every day she'll shed a ray,
Around my hearth at Langley Moor.

The Young Gardener or Annie's Husband.

'To marry a common gardener, when she might have made such a good settlement in life. Well, well, Annie would live to repent not taking advice.' So said Mrs. Martha Halliday, as she bewailed her young sister's folly.

A gardener lad with less than a pound a week—it was a sad blow to the family pride—and Annie might have done so much better, for Mr. Alfred Symington, a traveler in the wine and spirit trade, had asked her to be his wife.

No advice, however, would pervade Annie take; and so, without the consent of her friends, she took her journeyman gardener. To be sure they had known each other from childhood, and he loved her, and she loved him; but what was about that when Annie could have done so much better.

Mrs. Martha Halliday was a practical person, and having herself married with a sensible man, she had no patience with Annie.—Neither had her two other sisters, who had likewise wedded to advantage.

The young couple removed to a distant town shortly after their marriage, and it was understood that there was to be no communication with Annie's family unless John Henderson got a windfall. Full two years passed in blank silence.

'I expect, John spends the half of his miserable pittance in drink,' said Mrs. Halliday to her second sister, Matilda, who was the inn-keepers lady, as they bewailed poor Annie.

'Well, I wouldn't be astonished,' responded Mrs. Parkinson; 'and considering the temptations of large towns, it's likely enough, I think.'

'How is Parkison at present?' put in Mrs. Halliday.

'He was 'on' again last week, that's why I wasn't across. I'm sure I don't know what to do,' sighed Mrs. Parkison.

'Sophy writes me, Harland is dreadfully unsteady indeed,' said her sister, 'and he is losing his business with his intemperate habits,' she says further.

'I think drink is to be the curse of our family,' sighed Matilda.

'You can't include the Hallidays,' said her sister, bristling. 'I have reason to be thankful, though liquor is our business, Peter Halliday is as temperate a man as you'll find in Houghton.'

'Oh, he can take his glass as well as his neighbours,' retorted her sister.

'In moderation,' threw in Mrs. Halliday pointedly.

'You can't tell what he may be yet, though,' said Matilda; 'my husband began with moderation as gentle as any, and it was by adding a little and a little he overran the measure.'

'But if John Henderson has fallen into the snare what will Annie do?' said Mrs. Halliday, returning to the subject uppermost.

'Of course she has herself to blame,' said Mrs. Parkison; 'she didn't need to fling herself away.'

That was the sore point with the sisters.

'Alfred is married now,' said Mrs. Halliday inwardly; 'and I hear he has set up shop on his own account.'

'Annie might have been a lady,' sighed Mrs. Parkison.

'Yes, Alfred is sure to make money if he takes care,' responded Mrs. Halliday. 'He has got a nice central situation, I understand, close to the public 'works' and a large nursery, and all the new drink freely.'

'Well, he is out of our family now,' said Mrs. Parkison, 'and it can't be helped.'

One solitary second cousin was the only relative who countenanced Annie; he happened to be in the same town, and had ample opportunity of seeing how she fared with the gardener. Evidently, however, he had no good news to tell, for he never named the Hendersons in his letters. In course of time he went to Houghton to visit his friends, but he continued silent on the cast-put sister.

'Haven't you seen the Hendersons?' said Mrs. Halliday, carelessly, when Robert Drew was running over the family pedigree.

'Ahh! the Hendersons,' said Robert, becoming grave; he stopped and shook his head.

'In misery and trouble, I suppose,' said Mrs. Halliday.

'Are you prepared for it?' said Robert.

'I knew that was before Annie when she married John Henderson,' returned Mrs. Halliday. 'It's the old story of drink I expect.'

'And a sad one it is,' said Robert.

Mrs. Halliday was rather pleased than otherwise. Annie could expect no better when she went against her friends. 'Is Henderson always in the nursery?' she asked.

'I think not regularly now,' answered Robert; but it would be a charity if you could make a run through. I am certain it would cheer Annie to see her friends.'

'She doesn't deserve it,' returned Mrs. Halliday, 'but if she is very badly off I will send her a little money.'

'You must go yourself,' said Robert, 'if you would like to do her any good.'

'Mrs. Parkison can go if she chooses, said Mar. Halliday, shifting the duty off her own shoulders.

'Go together;' said Robert, 'it will take you both to comfort Annie.'

'It's a bad season for either of us leaving home,' said Mrs. Halliday, 'and poor Matilda is in trouble herself with her husband.'

'The old story again,' said Robert.

'Isn't it deplorable that people can't all keep to a moderate glass,' said Mrs. Halliday.

Robert shrugged his shoulders.

'And drunkenness is such an abomination,' continued Mrs. Halliday, 'as I tell the fools who come here to disgrace themselves.'

'Such are weak through temptation,' said Robert, 'and are drawn into the same unawares.'

'It's their own fault, however,' put in Mrs. Halliday. 'Drunkards walk into misery with their eyes open.'

'I think John Henderson will agree with you, there,' laughed Robert.

'I can't think of him with patience!' said Mrs. Halliday. 'Annie might have done so much better, and married as genteelly as her sisters.'

'Would she have been happier with Mr. Perkins or Mr. Harland?' said Robert.

'They are two precious idiots, with the chances they had to begin life with; but Alfred Symington had sense.'

'He has lost it all now, then;' laughed Robert, 'for he has turned his own best customer, and he is posting on to ruin as hard as he can—his wife is back to her friends.'

Mrs. Halliday held up her hands. 'But our Annie seems to have a spirit above troubling her friends.'

'Aye! she is too gentle to thurst herself in where she isn't wanted,' said Robert.—'And however bad her husband was, she would keep by him like a true wife, I am persuaded.'

'Well, anyway, we are pretty certain of Sophy 'back on our hands,' sighed Mrs. Harland.

'Are accounts so bad?' asked Robert.

'When I was seeing the Harlands in spring things couldn't be much worse with them,' said the sister. 'There wasn't a remnant of their former gentility left them. I don't think Annie can be much worse.'

'If you'll take a trip to see her, I will stay to keep Mr. Halliday company until you come back,' said Robert. 'I am sure you would forgive Annie if you saw her now.

A family consultation was held and it was agreed that Mrs. Halliday should see Annie, and give her a little assistance, and, furnished with her address, she started for Edinburgh, while Robert was at Houghton. He saw her off in the train very gravely, but when the engine snorted off out of sight, he laughed loud and long.

We must, however, follow Mrs. Halliday. No accident took place on the line, and she reached Edinburgh in safety, at mid-day.—As she was to stay a night in town she let it be almost dark before she set out in search of Annie's home. She expected the Hendersons lived in a wretched hole, if they had a roof to shelter them, but, to her consternation, she found she had lost the address Robert gave her. It must have been when she was shopping. 'It was near the 'Nursery,' she remembered, and, drawing her veil over her face, she set out on trial.

The gates were shut, and she saw no gardener hanging about. She crossed the street to a spirit-shop on the opposite side; Henderson would be known there, no doubt. Yes, he lived round by the nursery, and he had gone home drunk from the 'Turk's Head' about half an hour ago.

With a heavy heart, Mrs. Halliday gathered up her ample skirts again.

Henderson's house was easily found. A poor, dirty, smoky, miserable hole it was; but the shattern little wife was not Annie!

On further inquiry, too, Mrs. Halliday found Henderson's Christian name was Joseph. As she was turning away, her eye fell on a little white cottage standing on an eminence at a distance. It evidently belonged to a gardener, for the porch was luxuriant with honey-suckle and sweet briar, and the pot of grassed in front was most tastefully laid out. The pretty little wicket gate was open, and she passed in, thinking if it were the foreman's house, she might obtain some information of the Hendersons.

The setting sun's parting beams seemed to love to linger on that peaceful home. Before tapping at the porch, Mrs. Halliday shook out her dress, and arranged the folds of her shawl, and put on her most genteel air.

A smart, stout, tidy girl opened and asked her to walk in.

The parlor door stood half open, and seeing tea was set, Mrs. Halliday drew back, but a slight figure in mourning came forward, with a smile on her pale face; and who was that handsome stalwart fellow at the window? It couldn't be John Henderson.

"Why not, Mrs. Halliday? It's not time for his hair to be gray yet, or his shoulders bent."

"John, John, it's Martha, my sister," cried the figure in mourning, running to his side."

"Hope you are well, mam," said John with a stiff bow.

"There's some mistake, surely," said Mrs. Halliday, gazing round the comfortable parlor in amazement, and at a soft white neat, wherein sat a blue eyed cherub, crowing and shouting in infantine glee.

"Oh, Martha, I was so glad to see you," said Annie, "and I hope we are going to be friends now," she added, holding out her hand.

"Is this your house, Annie?" asked Mrs. Halliday, bewildered beyond expression.

"Yes, isn't it a pretty cottage; I shall be sorry to leave it," said Annie.

"Well, Robert Drew has given me a start," said Mrs. Halliday, "but I am very glad you have found a purse, John."

"I wasn't aware of it, ma'am," said John Henderson stooping down to the cradle.

"Oh, keep your own secret," said Mrs. Halliday; "but, I am truly delighted to see you both looking so well and so prosperous; and all the more that I was led to expect a different state of affairs."

"Oh, indeed, we are very, very happy," said Annie, bursting into tears.

"I hope you haven't come to accuse my wife, ma'am," said John, looking up from the cradle.

"I heard that Annie was in grief, and, I came to offer her a sisters sympathy," said Mrs. Halliday. "It's not needed I see, and I will not trouble her with my presence, if its not agreeable."

"Oh, Martha! oh, John, don't!" cried Annie, "let us forgive and forget while we are smarting under the rod."

"I're no wish to keep up animosity with anybody," said Mr. Henderson.

"Well, John, you have made Annie as comfortable as we could desire, and I will own I was wrong in opposing her choice," frankly owned Mrs. Halliday.

"That will do, ma'am," said John, nobly holding out his hand,—"let bygones be bygones."

"But tell me, Annie, how has John prospered so well?" asked Mrs. Halliday, as the two sisters sat talking by themselves.

"By his own steadiness and industry," answered Annie. 'We both became total abstainers, and there's never a bottle in our house. We saved our money, and we saved our health, and John's clear head did the rest.'

'I always knew he was a clever lad,' said Mrs. Halliday.

'John has a fine taste, you know,' said Annie, 'and he has been studying hard since we were married; he is reckoned the best gardiner in the nursery, I believe.'

'Well, he has got on amazingly,' put in Mrs. Halliday.

'But I have more news,' said Annie, with a smile. 'Some time ago an English nobleman wanted plans for laying out his gardens in a splendid style, John drawings were chosen, and his lordship was so much pleased with John when he saw him, that he has appointed him superintendent of his magnificent grounds, and we are to remove to Rockdale Castle next month.'

'Well, well; to be sure, we have all been mistaken,' said her sister. 'But who are you in mourning for, Annie?'

'Our boy—that's his drum, Martha, and his little shoes, and he was just beginning to prattle at my knee.'

'Ah! Robert Drew! I see now what you were at,' muttered Mrs. Halliday.—Scottish Temperance League Journal.

THE FOILED BURGLAR.

Messrs. Perkins & Co. kept a large jewelry store on the corner of Washington street, Boston, and for the better security of their store against fire, and other casualities, they employed one of their clerks to sleep in it at night. The idea of the store being attacked by robbers was not for a moment entertained, but it was for other objects that young Long the clerk slept there, for he was not supplied with any weapons to repel an attack of thieves.

But one dark, dreary night he was awakened by a singular noise which resembled that which a party of burglars might produce in an attempt to enter the building, and on looking towards the back windows he soon fully satisfied himself that one or more persons were endeavoring as quietly as possible to effect an entrance at that quarter. They had already removed a part of the sash and shutter with their cunningly devised instruments, and must have been at work some time before he was awakened.

Now young Long regretted that he had no weapon, but not through fear—that was not characteristic of the young gentleman—but that he might pepper the rogues. At first he determined to cry and arouse the watch; but as they had advanced so far before he awoke, he though he would drive them off by stratagem. He clipped on his clothes quietly and approached the spot where the thieves were busy; he saw the head of one of them pass inside of the shutter into the store, in its owners endeavors to guide a small handsaw, with which he was cutting an aperature for the body to pass through.

Young Long felt inclined to chop off the hand with a small hatchet that lay hard by, but he refrained, and bethought himself of a powerful preparation of caustic, vitrol, and other penetrating stuffs, that were used in the testing of silver and other metals. One drop of this would eat instantly into the flesh and produce a poisonous sore in less than ten minutes time. He cautiously dropped a little on the burglar's hand and awaited the result.

'Bill,' at length exclaimed the burglar to his comrade, 'I've a cursed burning on the back of my hand. It's so sore I can hardly work this saw. Phew! how it smarts. I guess I've cut it with the saw. Hold the dark lantern here.'

'Pedge Prepbed his companion. 'Change hands then, but don't stop.'

'Take and saw away yourself then. I can't stand the pain.'

And while the discomfited burglar withdrew to groan over the disputed cut, the other took his place with the saw, and in a moment after received a few drops of the fiery liquid upon the back of his head, and was seen groaning with agony.

'Curse this saw, it has cut me, too,' groaned the second thief.

And after sundry oaths, mutually exchanged until the first and worst attack of pain was over, they renewed the attempt to make an entrance.

The clerk permitted them to go on awhile uninterrupted, knowing that at any time he could stop their efforts by crying out, but he hoped to hear some watchman passing the front of the store, upon whom he could call to secure the rogues, and resolved to wait for this until it would do to wait no longer. But soon the burglars had so much enlarged the hole, that they would shortly be able to enter it themselves.

Seeing that he must do something to stop them, the clerk crept into the dark closet at one side of the window, and uttered a fierce but low growl, in imitation of a dog.

Both of the rogues stepped back at this unexpected interruption.

'Hang it, Bill, there is a cursed dog in there. I didn't know that Perkins & Co. kept one,' said one to the other.

'A dog!—that's bad! Curse 'em, if it was a man, why, a dirk stroke would fix him: but a dog is quite another thing, for if we shoot him he would be sure to kill one of us.'

'Bow, wow, bow!' cried the clerk with all his power, as he saw them preparing to resume their work.

'Confound the dog!' exclaimed both.

'Never mind; go ahead, Bill, and get it, open now. I'll fix him when we get in.'

The burglar addressed as Bill, thrust in his hand once more to wrench off the last piece of wood that obstructed their entrance when the clerk, having already armed himself with a large pair of pincers, seized the robber's hand as though in a vice, and set up such an outrageous barking that the whole neighborhood was alarmed.

'For heaven's sake, Jack, lend us a hand here; the cursed animal is biting my hand off!' said the burglar to his confederate.

'Pull it away—pull it away, quick!'

'I can't.'

'O-o-o-! I can't! Murder, murder!'

This cry, added to the barking of the supposed dog, soon brought the police in good earnest, and the one who was at liberty to do so, ran for his life. The policeman's lights showed Bill Sikes that he had been bitten by a pair of pincers! He passed five years of his life at the State prison for the crime of assisting other people's property.

LORD ELGIN'S LAST DAYS.

[From the London Morning Advertiser.]

The current number of the North British Review, which is one of great ability and variety, contains a long article on the character of the late Lord Elgin, under the title of "Lord Elgin in Memoriam." Judging from the internal evidence, we should ascribe this article to the pen of the Duke of Argyle. We extract from it the following interesting, and, in parts affecting account of the late Governor General of India:—

On the 6th of November, Dr. Macrae came to the conclusion that the illness was mortal. This intelligence, which he communicated at once to Lord Elgin, was received with a calmness and fortitude which never deserted him through all the scenes which followed. When at once he had satisfied himself, by minute inquiries from Dr. Macrae, of the true state of the case, after one deep, earnest, heartfelt regret that he should thus suddenly be parted from those nearest, and dearest, to whom his life was of such inestimable importance, and that he should be removed just as he had prepared himself to benefit the people committed to his charge, he steadily set his face heavenward.

He was startled, he was awed; he felt it "hard, hard, to believe that his life was condemned," but there was no looking backward. Of the officers of the staff he took an affectionate leave that day. "It is well," he said to one of them "that I should die in harness. And thenceforth he saw no one habitually, except Dr. Macrae, who combined with his medical skill the tenderness and devotion at once of a friend and a pastor; his attached Secretary, Mr. Thorlow, who had rendered him the most faithful services, not only through the period of his Indian vice-royalty, but during his last mission to China; and her who had shared his every thought, and whose courageous spirit now rose above the weakness of the fragile frame, equal to the greatness of the calamity, and worthy of him to whom by night and day, she constantly ministered.

On the following day the clergyman whom he had ordered to be summoned, and for whose arrival he waited with much anxiety, reached Dhurmsala, and administered the Holy Communion to himself and those with him. "We are now entering on a new Communion," he had said that morning, "the Living and the Dead," and his spirit then appeared to master pain and weakness, and to sustain him in a holy calm during the ceremony and for a few hours afterwards. "It is a comfort," he whispered "to have laid aside all the cares of this world, and put myself in the hands of God;" and he was able to listen at intervals to favorite passages from the New Testament. That evening closed in with an aggravation of suffering. It was the evening of the seventeenth anniversary of his wedding day.

On the following morning, Lady Elgin, with his approval, rode up to the cemetery at Dhurmsala, to select a spot for his grave, and he gently expressed pleasure when told of the quiet and beautiful aspect of the spot chosen, with the glorious view of the snowy range towering above, and the wide prospect of hill and plain below.

The days and nights of the fortnight which followed were a painful alternation of severe suffering and rare intervals of comparative tranquillity. They were soothed by the never-failing devotion of those that were always at hand to read to him or to receive his remarks. He often asked to hear chosen chapters from the Book of Isaiah (as the 40th and 55th), sometimes murmuring over to himself any striking verses that they contained, and at other times repeating by heart favorite Psalms, which recalled to him an early feat of his youth, when he had translated into Greek the 137th Psalm—"By the waters of Babylon we sat down and wept."

At times he delighted to hear his little girl, who had been the constant companion of his travels, repeat some of Keble's hymns, especially those on the festival of St. John the Evangelist, and of the Holy Innocents. Years ago he had guided himself in having been the first to introduce into Scotland "The Christian Year," which as a student from Oxford, where the first edition—first of its seventy-seven editions—had just appeared. How touching a reward for him—how touching a tribute to the enduring piety and genius of its venerable author, that after the lapse of so long a tract of time to both—of quiet pastoral life and eager controversy for the one; of diplomacy and government, war and shipwreck and travels from hemisphere to hemisphere, for the other—that fountain of early devotion should still remain fresh and pure to sooth his dying hours!

Until his strength failed him, he was carried at times into the verandah, and showed by word and look his constant admiration at the grand evidences of God's power and goodness in the magnificence of the scenery before him; and on one such occasion was delighted with the sublime description of the wonders of nature in the 38th and 39th chapters of the Book of Job. At times, he was able to enter into conversation and argument on serious subjects. When under the pressure of his sufferings, he was one night entreating to be released—"Oh that God would in mercy come and take me!" Dr. Macrae reminded him of the dread of pain and death which seemed to be experienced in the account of the Agony of Gethsemane, and he appeared to find much comfort in the thought, repeating once or twice that he had not come in to the hour before, and several times saying with fervor, "Not my will but Thine be done."

At other times he could even be led, by way of steadying his wandering thoughts amidst the distraction of restlessness, to fix them on his school and college days, to tell anecdotes of his hard reading, or to describe the visit to Oxford of his venerable friend Dr. Chalmers. He dwelt in this way on a sermon of Dr. Chalmers, at Glasgow, which he remembered even in detail, from which he quoted some eloquent passages, bringing out the general scope of the sermon, to the effect that, rather than teach men to hate this bad world, we should teach them to love and look up to a better one. It will naturally be understood that long converse was really impossible. An occasional prayer, a few words were breathed, an appropriate verse quoted, and a few minutes were all that could be given at any one time to discourse upon it.

It is characteristic of his strong, cheerful faith, even during those last trying moments, that he on one occasion asked to have the more supplicatory, penitential Psalms exchanged for those of praise and thanksgiving in which he joined, knowing them already by heart, and in the strain of calm yet triumphant hope, he whispered to himself on the night when his alarming state was first made known to him. "Hallelujah! the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth. We all shall meet again."

That thought was raised to its highest pitch by the sight of a portrait of a beloved son, who had died in England during his absence. It arrived in the close of those sad days. He recognised it at once, with a burst of tenderness and delight which at once lifted his mind above the suffering of his mortal illness. Again and again he desired to see it, and to speak of it, with the conviction that he and his "angel boy," as he called him, would soon meet in a better world. "Oh! when shall I be with you?" "You know where he is; we shall all go to him; he is happy."

Every care had been taken for the public interests, and for the interests of those still nearer and dearer to him. He had laid the most solemn charge on his faithful secretary to conduct Lady Elgin home on her mournful and solitary voyage. He had given to Dr. Macrae, with the tenderest marks of affection, a turquoise ring: "We have had a long struggle together; keep this in memory of it." He had dictated a telegram to the Queen resigning his office, with a request that his successor might be immediately appointed.

With this exception, public affairs seem to have faded from his mind. "I must resign myself to doing no work. I have not sufficient control over my thoughts. I have wasted my hands of it all." But it was remarkable that as the end drew nearer, the keen sense of the public duty once more flashed up within him. It was on the 19th that he could not help expressing his wonder what was meant by his long lingering; and once, half wondering, he whispered: "If I did die, I might go to Lahore, and carry out the original programme."

Later in the day he sent for Mr. Thorlow, and desired that a message should be sent, through Sir Charles Wood, expressive of his love and devotion to the Queen, and of his determination to do his work to the last possible moment. His voice, faint and inaudible at first, gained strength with the earnestness of the words which came forth as if direct from his heart, and which, as soon as pronounced, left him prostrate with the exertion. He begged, at the same time, that his "best blessing" might be sent to the Secretaries of the Indian Government, and also a private message to Sir Charles Wood in England.

These were his last public acts. A few words and looks of affection for his wife and child, were all that occupied him afterwards. One more night of agonized restlessness, followed by an almost sudden close of the long struggle, and a few moments of perfect calm, and his spirit was released.—His death was on the 20th of November, and on the 21st he was privately buried at his own request, on the spot selected before-hand.

The Assessment Rolls in Asphodel.

We have received numerous communications in relation to the assessment of this township. And in reply to our correspondents, have to state we have consulted competent authority on the matter, and are informed that in all cases where the schedule was not left before the first of May, the assessment is illegal and consequently inoperative. The act distinctly specifies that the assessor must return the rolls not later than the first of May, previous to which he must have left a statement of the amount of assessment with each party assessed. It follows that those who were not served with a schedule stating the amount of assessment before the tenth or twelfth of May, have not been assessed at all and are not liable to pay anything in the shape of taxes. The sitting of the Revision Court in June was illegal. The following is a sample of the complaints we are in the habit of receiving lately.—Mr. John Cameron, resides on the boundary line between Asphodel and Otonabee, on lot 13 in the 1st concession.

He states that the assessor called on him somewhere about the end of February or beginning of March, when he told him he wished to be assessed on the north east 25 acres of his lot and that he was to assess his brother Donald for the remainder. Mr. Cameron says that the whole lot was formerly assessed for $8 per acre, and that if he was assessed for the same sum this year he would be assessed on $200 and consequently be entitled to a vote. It must be borne in mind that formerly the whole hundred acres were assessed at $8 per acre, and that on the 25 acres, on which Mr. Cameron elected to be assessed the whole of the farm buildings were situate. Consequently this portion of the lot was worth at least double any other 25 acres on the lot.

Conceive of Mr. Cameron's astonishment, when about the tenth or twelfth day of May, the assessment schedule was handed in and he found himself assessed at only $45. Mr. Cameron has long been a consistent reformer and thinks that this reduction of the value of his land was purposely done to deprive him of his vote—and that the whole matter of the assessment has been gone about in a very loose manner. We leave our readers to judge for themselves. Dr. Poole admits that one illegal vote was made at the Court of Revision of 4th of June, is it not possible that more than one reformer has been unjustly deprived of the privilege of the Franchise? Why was it if there was no intention to wrong Mr. Cameron that he was not notified of the amount of his assessment on or before the first of May, as the law directs. And why was his schedule only served on him a day or two before the meeting of the Court of Revision, when it was almost impossible for him to have it rectified?

SOUTH ONTARIO ELECTION.

The South riding of Ontario, on Monday, elected the Hon. Mr. Mowatt by acclamation.

The attendance at the hustings was not large, but this might arise from two of many causes. This is the farmers busy season, and there was to be no opposition.

The handsome manner in which the Electors of South Oxford and Ontario have returned their representatives argues well for the present ministerial combination, it shows Mr. Brown and his friends that they are fully trusted, and that if they are not able to carry out the programme they have sketched for themselves they will not have their old friends to blame. We hope Mr. McDougal will also be elected, although we confess we think the electors in every instance have the full right to return whom they please, yet it seems Mr. McDougal's influence is necessary to the carrying out of the measures that will so much occupy the attention of the legislature at its next sitting, and we would like that the work of rearrangement were gone into with the least possible trouble. If Mr. McDougal were defeated it might tend to complicate matters, and though personally we would be strongly opposed to Mr. McDougal yet we would rather —we say again, that Mr. McDougal were reelected, that there might be no chance of a complication between parties.

NORTH ONTARIO ELECTION.

Since noticing Mr. Mowatt's re-election, we learn by the Globe that at the nomination in the North Riding of Ontario on Tuesday, Mr. McDougal had the show of hands. Mr. Cameron, who, is a firm supporter of Cartier and McDonald could give nothing but personal grounds for his opposition to Mr. McDougall. If he was elected he would give the ministry, of which Mr. Brown was a member his support. The issue then, is not a party one, simply a personal one between Mr. Cameron and Mr. McDougal, they are both on the same side. We hope as we said before Mr. McDougal will be re-elected and have every reason to believe he will. The Sheriff declared the show of hands to be in Mr. McDougal's favor by a small majority, though there were those present well qualified to judge who felt sure that if hands had been counted there were two to one for Mr. McDougal.

Fatal Accident at Lindsay.

On Tuesday, whilst some of the members of the Lindsay Rifle Company were out for ball practice, a young man named Brewer, from Toronto, was standing near the butt behind some trees. None of the Company knew that he was there, and unfortunately a ball from the rifle of a young man named John Philips penetrated his skull, and went out at his forehead. Brewer lived only a few minutes. An inquest was held; verdict, "Accidental Death." The body was conveyed to Toronto for interment.

Spalding and Rogers' Circus.—It will be seen by an advertisement in another column, that the "Great Ocean Circus" of Messrs. Spalding and Rogers performs in town next week. This company is at present making a tour of the Provinces; and wherever it has appeared, has been highly eulogized by the press. Particulars will be found in the advertisement.

THE TWELFTH OF JULY.

The one hundred and seventy-fourth anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne passed to have been celebrated throughout Canada with more than usual pomp. Our usual apprehensions have given the matter much more than usual prominence. Some of the speeches delivered were of considerable political importance, and seem to show that combinations between the Orange and Green—however they may have been tolerated in the past—will not be permitted in the future. From all we have read, we believe that the Orangemen, to a man, will support Mr. Brown in his attempt to arrange the difficulties existing between Upper and Lower Canada. The Leader says, in reference to the day in Hamilton:

"THE EXCURSION FROM TORONTO.

"At about half past eight in the morning two immense trains of eighteen cars each, and containing over 1,000 people, Orangemen and others, left the Union depot in this city, for the neighboring city of Hamilton, at which place they arrived at about 11 o'clock. The best arrangements had been made by the Great Western Company, all of which were carried out under the excellent supervision of Mr. William Wallace, Passenger Superintendent of the line, who, along with Mr. Thorp, agent at Toronto, and the other employes, did all in their power to accommodate the excursionists.

"THE DAY IN HAMILTON.

"At ten o'clock the Orangemen of Hamilton and the surrounding district, in full regalia, with music, having mustered on James Street, near the Rev. Mr. Geddes' Church, proceeded to the depot of the Great Western, where they "opened out" and received their Toronto brethren with all the honors. Things having been put into "shipshape," the procession, headed by the county and district masters, and the Torontonians under the marshalship of Mr. James Jones, of this city, Mr. McCabe, of Hamilton, and five others, marched along James to Main Street, down Main to Walnut Street, across by the latter to King Street, and up King to the Crystal Palace, where refreshments had been provided and served out without stint to such as called for them. The procession was over a mile in length, and took three-quarters of an hour to pass a given point, and numbered about 1,100, while the total of those present may be set down at 5,000. The streets were one perfect jam during the passage of the procession, and all the available windows were perfectly studded with the happy faces of the fair sex. The following Lodges took part in the procession:—TORONTO—No. 12, Young Brittons, W. M. David J. Cinnamon; 4, Nassau, Jas. Burns; 136, Jno. Ross; 137, Ogle R. Gowan; 130, William Adamson; 212, Daniel Murray. SCARBORO—215, Alex. Moffatt. WESTON—215, A. Kirkpatrick. TORONTO—275, F. H. Medcalf; 878, York, John Irwin; 387, R. Bell; 396, T. Downey; 621, H. Haskett; 551, dep. m. — Busted; 304, A. M. Jameson; 506, Yorkville, William Frazer; 585, ——; 667, James Carr; 770, Dundas, John McCay. GLANFORD—19. HAMILTON—71, H. Carter; 286, H. Heron; 312, T. Minnis; 360, Caistor, Haldimand; 283, W. T. Clelland; 554, Ancaster, J. Bakerstone; 353, J. Beauty, Cardill; 1044, Binbrooke, James Hoey.

"The various lodges, especially those from Toronto, were marked by their neat and tasteful dress, and the behaviour was more noticeable from the fact that not a man was seen under the influence of liquor in the line of procession. After the Hamilton brethren and their visitors had partaken of refreshments, an adjournment took place to the riding track on the exhibition ground, in the centre of which is a small covered stand for the judges, which was made use of by those who spoke on this occasion.

The British Whig says: "To-day the annual commemeration of the Battle of the Boyne took place in the City of Kingston, by a Grand Procession of the Lodges of this District from the City Hall to the Crystal Palace and return. The Procession may possibly have been larger on some former Anniversaries, but never could have been more respectable than it was this day. The Procession was composed of the strength and sinew of the Orange Body. The following is a list of the lodges:—

The Lodge of 'Prentice Boys.
The Wolfe Island Lodge.
Amherst Island Lodge.
Portsmouth Lodge.
No. 201 City Lodge.
Pittsburgh Lodge.
Another Pittsburgh Lodge.
Storrington Lodge.
Waterloo Lodge.
Glenbervie Lodge.
No. 1095 City Lodge.
The Sydenham Lodge.
Prince of Wales Lodge.
The Victoria Temperance Lodge.
In all about One Thousand Souls.

There were no less than three Bands of Music walking with these Lodges, independent of numerous Fifes and Drums.

At the Crystal Palace an impressive Sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Dawson, a Sermon that was greatly admired for its plain common sense and good advice.

John Flanigan, Esq., officiated as Grand Marshal, with three Assistants, all four mounted on white horses in good style.

May every Twelfth of July pass over like the present."

The Newmarket Era says the members of the Orange fraternity of the Aurora, Newmarket and Sharon Lodges, celebrated the one hundred and seventy-four anniversary of the battle of the Boyne, by a public procession and dinner at Aurora. After the removal of the cloth several speeches were made, bearing on the event, and the principles of the order.

In the afternoon, quite a large number, formed in procession in carriages and on horseback, and visited this place—headed by the celebrated Aurora Military Band.—The procession was orderly, and everything passed off, so far as we could learn, peacably and quietly.

St. Mary's Argus says the twelfth in St. Mary's was celebrated in the usual manner. Nine lodges from Blanshard, St. Mary's Downie, and Nissouri assembled in this town, marched through the principal streets to Rogers' grove, where they were appropriately addressed by Rev. S. Smyth, St. Mary's; J. R. Gundy, London; S. B. Gundy, E. N. Elliott and —Jones, of St. Mary's. A large number of people from the country were in town on the occasion, and the whole proceedings were conducted in a manner which reflected credit upon the Order, justifying the remark that these celebrations are yearly growing more respectable in this section. A neat arch, constructed of maple leaves and ornamented with the crown in the centre, was thrown across Queen street bridge in such a way that all alike were compelled to pass under it, which many liberal Protestants as well as Roman Catholics, we presume, complained of, as illiberal and unfair. The day passed off, we are happy to state, without the slightest disturbance.

From Lindsay we learn that the Orangemen of the District of Emily celebrated the twelfth in Lindsay, and the turn out made by Emily was one of the most respectable ever made in this section. The several Orange lodges under the guidance of the District Master, T. Stephenson, Esq., marched to the station where, by the kindness of the railway officials, a train was in waiting to convey them to Lindsay, and in a very short space of time Mr. Barton, Station Master shipped through his fingers over 500 tickets. On the platform cars, which were provided with seats, we noticed right stand of colors, which in Lindsay swelled to eighteen—several lodges having arrived from Mariposa. After marching through the principal streets of Lindsay, the Orangemen assembled on a green near the Court House, where addresses were delivered by the Rev. Messrs. Windle and Edwards, T. Stephenson, Esq., District Master of Emily, and Wm. Foster, Esq., County Master.

We may supplement our account of the doings of the day in Port Hope with the following from the Canadian:—

"Addresses were delivered by D'Arcy Plunkett, Esq., Colonel Gray, R. Saunders, Esq., Rev. D. Considine, Rev. J. Roaf, Port Hope, Wm. Arnliss, Esq., Cobourg, and Hon. Sidney Smith, Peterboro.'

The Orangemen of Canada can pay by their redeeming themselves from the imputations of those who shield in their friends. They have been charged with serious improprieties at their celebrations, but, however true or untrue this may have been in days gone by, we are certain that no more intelligent or better conducted body of men of any class could be brought together than the Orangemen who assembled in Port Hope on Tuesday last.

"The Lodges of Cold Springs and Gore's Landing, on their way to Port Hope halted, as usual, at Ravenscourt, to coffee and breakfast. The interesting ceremony of "Wreathing the Colors" was gracefully performed by a young lady from Toronto, whose touching address will be long remembered by those who have been associated with Capt. Hayward in the loyal order, of which he has for more than 20 years been a member. The breakfast was got up in Capt. Hayward's usual hospitable way, and was appreciated by those who were fortunate enough to be present. The following is the address:—

Worshipful Master, and Loyal Orangemen of Northumberland Lodges, of Gore's Landing and Cold Springs:—

Allow me, on your march to Port Hope to wreath the banners of your imperishable order.

Long may you live to unfurl those emblems of civil and religious liberty, which Great Britain, under Divine Providence, has been permitted to foster throughout the world."

Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Canada.

The Most Worshipful Lodge held their Annual Communication at Hamilton, on the 13th inst. There was a large gathering. The Grand Master, T. Douglas Harrington, gave an able address, which covers over two columns of the Globe. It seems this is the Ninth Annual Communication, since the Canadian Grand Lodge separated from the Grand Lodge of England. In the Grand Master's Address, he stated that Free Masons were eminently loyal men:

"Without loyalty they cannot be in practice what they profess to be, and, therefore, I make no apology before noticing our own specific affairs, for mentioning, as a matter of sincere congratulation, the auspicious birth of a Prince—born, let us hope, and pray, to be a joy to its illustrious parents, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and an additional source, combined with the unwavering affection of her subjects, of consolation to our widowed good Queen, and to secure to our common country, the British Empire, a continuation of those virtues and excellencies that belong to our Sovereign, and also the well-known attributes of the late Prince Consort, and which live not only in the national heart, but are freely acknowledged by the world at large. I am sure you will not be backward in expressing your sentiments on this happy event."

During the past year eight dispensations to hold new Lodges have been granted. The English Lodge has erased from its list all the Canadian Lodges claimed as belonging to the Grand Lodge of Canada. A grand new Free Mason's Hall is being built in London, England, for the use of Masons from all parts of the world. The Grand Lodge of Scotland has sustained a severe loss; its esteemed Grand Master for the last twenty years, the M. W. Brother, the Duke of Athol, died on the 16th of January last. The following tribute to his memory is from the pen of a brother Mason, Sir A. Alison P. G. M. for Glasgow:

"He belonged to a race which, for above a century, had repeatedly given a Grand Master to the Free Freemasons of Scotland, and had never ceased to feel an interest in her proceedings. His own disposition rendered him peculiarly open to its influences. At once energetic and active, patient and enduring of suffering, resolute and humane, his spirit was warm, his disposition was chivalrous. His ear was ever open to the tale of suffering, his hand ready to assuage it. * * * * Assailed in the prime of life by a slow, but incurable and most painful disease, he bore his sufferings with fortitude, and looked forward to the issue without dismay. For three months he was face to face with the King of Terror in the most appaling form, and he never flinched from the sight. His whole thought was of others; his whole anxiety to discharge his duty to his Queen, his people, and his country. * * * When his sufferings were terminated, he yielded up his last breath with the hope of a Christian, with the courage of a Highlander, and in the spirit of a Freemason."

The Grand Master particularly advised great care to be exercised in the admission of members, and concluded an able address as follows:

"My brethren, I would, in conclusion, as I did last year, invite you to reflect on the signs of the times. You may be required, sooner than any of us think, to give up peace and comfort for danger and distress. The European horizon is by no means a clear one. The final effect upon us of the unfortunate civil war raging in the neighboring States, cannot be foretold or even guessed at. It is for us, therefore, to try and keep our houses in order, to perform our allotted tasks while it is yet day, and then we shall be quite prepared to do our duty as men and masons, in any way we may be called upon, never forgetting that, in peace or tumult, the aim of our ancient and honorable Order is the cultivation of morality and virtue, and practical benevolence and charity to all mankind. In the carrying on this design Masonic statistics state that there are in both hemispheres, some 9,000 Lodges, and probably three millions and a half of members more or less active."

THE MONTREAL WITNESS.

We commend this paper to the notice of our readers, as one of the best papers published in Canada. There are three editions published: The Daily, $3.00 per annum; the Semi-weekly $2.00 per annum; the Weekly, $1.50—all payable in advance. Perhaps we are not far wrong when we say it is the most independent paper published in the Province. We read it with great pleasure; it contains a vast amount of news well condensed. Its editorials are short and ably written. It is a fearless advocate of Truth, Right, Protestantism and Temperance. To its own hurt it excludes all advertisements of Intoxicating Drinks, Tobacco, Bitters, Quack Medicines, Theatricals, and all others deemed hurtful to society. Indeed we know of no religious weekly anywhere that is so strict in this respect. It has probably more editorial labor expended on it than any other paper in Canada—having besides general editors and reporters, special editors for particular departments. For instance, a gentleman thoroughly acquainted with banking and finances writes for it a regular review of the monthly bank returns, and of the financial affairs of Canada, which is, we have reason to now, eagerly looked for by monied and business men both in and out of Canada. As editor to whom French and English are alike familiar, keeps up with the French papers of Canada, making known to the English speaking population of the two Provinces what their French neighbors are thinking, saying and doing. Another editor has for his speciality to keep the run of the religious papers of Canada, Britain and the United States, so as to give general ecclesiastical and missionary intelligence, &c.—Besides these editors there, they spare no expense for special telegraphic and other reports, giving the most authentic information of this and other markets, arrival and departure of produce, &c., &c.; and price and market reports are published with the utmost despatch.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

We have been at considerable pains to make inquiries concerning the crops in this district, and are sorry that the report we have to make is not of a more encouraging kind. In the spring months the fall wheat looked extremely well, and indeed till a very few weeks ago there was the promise of a very large yield, but it has lately become painfully evident that the weevil was making sad havoc We hope the accounts we have heard have been exagerated, and that now farmers are cutting they will find that the ravages of the insect are confined to the outside of the fields.

On all sides we hear complaints of the condition of the spring crops. The season has been too dry for them they say. The straw will be short; and their will be very little grain—barley is looking well we hear from a good many sources—potatoes good—turnips a failure. The meadows are becoming quite brown on account of the drought, and cattle are said tobe suffering—as a consequence butter is rising considerably.

The following are from our exchanges—

The Globe says: 'In consequence of the anticipated failure of the wheat crop those holding any quantities of that article appear disinclined to part with it in hopes of obtaining a high figure in the fall. It is thought, however, by those who have taken some pains to make themselves acquainted with the true nature of the damage done to the wheat by the midge that its ravages are in a great measure confined to the grain growing immediately along the fences such places being warmer, and consequently more favorable to the growth of the insect, and that the yield may turn out to be better than is supposed by any who have not thoroughly examined into the matter."

And again:—

"The crops in the western counties have suffered severely in consequence of the great drought which prevailed this summer. There will be little straw to sell this fall. We are sorry to see that the "pickles" in the head of the wheat are so few; this no amount of rain can remedy. However, the rain which has fallen during the past week will have the effect of making what few "pickles" there are plump.

The "midge" has made great havoc with the white wheat; we learn that acres of this kind is being cut down for fodder before it ripens. So completely is it destroyed that in some cases a bushel of wheat could not be threshed out of the produce of an acre of land. The red wheat has withstood the ravages of the "midge" so far, and it looks healthy but stunted."

The Red River Nor'-Wester states that the crops are burnt up with the heat.

"We have had a few light showers during the past week, which have refreshed the crops partially; but it would require several days' rain to change the generally unfavorable aspect of things which prevails throughout the country. The ravages of the fly on the Fall Wheat still continue, and they seem to extend throughout the Western peninsula.—Sarnia Observer, July 8th."

The Chatham Reformer learns "that on Saturday last, Mr. Charteris had men engaged cutting down one of the finest looking fields of wheat in the county for fodder. A short time ago the weevil made its appearance amongst it, and in such quantities, that in almost every ear of wheat they were to be found. Mr. Charteris thought there was no use in letting it stand, as there would be no crop of any consequence, and came to the conclusion to cut the whole field down green to lay up for fodder."

The Leader says: "It is a cause for thankfulness that the wheat crop is not so very generally injured by the midge as has hereto been feared by those who made but a partial examination into the extent of the damage. A very excellent sample of fall wheat was left at this office yesterday by Mr. Burton, of Ontario, which he obtained from a field on the town line between Scarboro' and Markham, and he reports that the wheat is really excellent in that vicinity, and will be much better than was at first anticipated.

"A correspondent at Georgetown sends us a sample of wheat grown by Mr. Duncan Stewart near that place. It is entirely free from midge. Our correspondent says the Soule and other old varieties are completely destroyed in that neighborhood. The variety sent us came from the State of New York last year and will be extensively sown this year. The Mediterranean variety has been grown in the vicinity of Georgetown to some extent, but it has been injured by the midge, and the quality of wheat is very inferior."

"There was a little rain last week, but the fields are still parched and barren looking. Turnip seed sown two weeks since has never vegetated. What remains of the fall wheat, of which there was a great deal sown last fall, is eaten by the midge. On old meadows the hay is short and cannot be cut, and on new land the frost in the second week of June spoiled it. Peas are the only thing that look green and prosperous with me."—Extract from a letter from Plympton, Lambton County.

The Hasting Messenger says: "they are sadly in want of rain, in consequence of which the crops are suffering badly."

The Perth Courier says: "the the hay crop, owing to the drought, is destroyed, and grain looks very unpromising."

The Kingston British American says that the farmers in that vicinity give doleful accounts of the crops. Frost and drought appear to be the cause.

The Colborne Times says "the crops are suffering badly for want of rain. The hay will be an average cut, fall wheat looks well, but the spring wheat is damaged beyond recovery."

Kingston papers state that the indications of the fruit crop in that section are far from what might be hoped, and a slender yield of most varieties is only anticipated.

The Ayr Observer says wheat will soon be ripe in that neighborhood and some farmers would commence reaping last week.

The Toronto Leader says that "accounts of the ravages of the midge upon the wheat reach them daily from almost all parts of the country, and while some gentlemen of Toronto were travelling in that township they took specimens from 25 fields in a range of 15 miles. In these specimens not a single healthy kern was found, but nothing was to be seen but living worms or insects, which could be shaken out in thousands. Mediterranean wheat, grown in close proximity to the fields in which the midge has made such havoc, has almost entirely escaped."

The Oswego Advertiser says: "the farmers in the western part of the State commenced harvesting their wheat at the beginning of the week. The harvest is several days earlier than usual this season. What was not killed by the severe freezing of last winter, has matured finely. Samples have been sent us of different varieties, grown upon various soils in the vicinity of Galesburg, which gave indications of a good yield. The straw is bright, the head of fine size and well filled, and the berry is plump. The exhibition of these samples at the Board of Trade caused the wheat buyers on 'Change in spite of all discouraging reports previously heard to feel hopeful that they would have an opportunity to invest their surpluss of green leaves in wheat.

The fire at the Edgar and Melville Factory, Hamilton, is said to have been accidental. The correspondent of the Globe must have been mistaken when he said it was the work of an incendiary.

A Tribute to the memory of the late lamented Mrs. B——.

"Twas on thy deen, O friend! and not at when,
The Angel with the unremitting wreath,
Passing descended, and with velvet dinibs,
Whispered a word that had a sound like death.

Then fell upon the house a sudden gloom,
A shadow on those features fair and thin;
And softly from that hushed and darkened room,
Two angels issued, where but one went in."

There is a melancholy interest attached to every graveyard. As the wanderer wends his way among "the cold grey stones that name the underlying dead," he unavoidably meditates. Yonder lies one whom death found in the midst of life, perhaps beautiful and gay, the centre of a circle, the delight of many, a flower in the world's sunshine, whose House was built upon sand, that issued from beneath it as the form of life and beauty suddenly became human ashes; and here we find another grave of youth, where, perhaps, high-toned ambition and noble daring, deep searching philosophy and large souled philanthropy were all swallowed up, for with both of these there were mourners. The first was a child of time, and those whose hearts ached in sadness as the gloomy hearse bore her away to the narrow-House, were without that consolation which abideth mortality. The second a child of Jesus, for whom grief went no further than the portals of the tomb, and whose hope rose higher than the clouds and penetrated far beyond death's valley. Here again it may be side by side with the stripling, sleeps the gray haired sire who watched, worked, wept and prayed. "Hope and fear alternate triumphed in his breast." His hope a fountain of living water, and life a heavenward journey. He went at last to his reward, and with him perchance repuses the matron of his household who full of years and faith at the sunset of her pilgrimage resigned the cross for the crown. The pilgrim in every cemetry may thus observe, as he passes the graves of young and old, of rich and poor, and he is forced to the conclusion that death is no respector of ages or stations,—That he who gave and taketh is true and faithful and sends his messenger as a thief in the night.

The Little Lake burying ground, though only in its infancy, has already received many dear departed ones. New graves are constantly being made and fashioned in it. Many a golden cord has been severed, and many a bright hope crushed to ruins in the gathering in of those who there sleep the sleep that knows no waking. By the margin of yon Little Lake many a fond heart must love to linger. That little emerald island must be sacred to not a few, and while it continues to receive into its bosom its share of death's harvest, and there remain eyes to weep and hearts to mourn: for recollections will encircle its borders and trace its branch covered windings.

Non omnis moriar said the vain glorious poet, idly boasting that his posthumous fame would escape for a time death's arrow, and his craving for something beyond the grave is the refuge of many who stare aghast at the gloomy period of life, and live not only in but wholly of and for the world. But few, however, manage to fasten themselves indissolubly upon time. The parent may never forget the lost child, or the bereaved husband the loved share of his joys and sorrows, but the caskets bearing such recollections are soon broken and forgotten by the world, as soon as buried—is the rule as to the generality of those who pass away. A man's greatness or eminence may stamp itself upon history's page. The atrocious act of the villain is often recorded, and the valiant deed of the hero proclaimed. The act being a great, if not a good one, it is recollected, and the actors name is kept from oblivion with the remembrance of the action.

Happily, however, the eminence which may serve to stimulate the ambitions, the villany which may shine as a beacon to warn erring humanity, and the valiance which exhibits both the strength and weakness of human power are not the only records of man in past ages. Besides these there there are instances of the goodness of man and the gentler goodness of woman having found a place in more than partial—what almost might be called universal memory. In this sin-cursed world where the blightings of Satan are everywhere visible, it is delightful to find one pure and gentle soul, and the story of such an one serves to remind others that the sublimification of life is within their own grasp. The life of a child of God recalls the Power of God's grace which he is ever ready and willing to bestow. One has lately passed from among us whose bright life and character illuminated not only a fireside but a large community, and whose memory will long remain enshrined in many a heart.

To a world that lives for the most part entirely in itself—to men and women who never rise beyond the narrow confines of their own Satan bound desires, and whose affections are all animal and carnal, the life that has just passed affords a solemn lesson, and to those who have fled for refuge to the only hope of the sinner, and who rejoice in God our Saviour, the triumph of her who has left us is full of the most assuring comfort and consolation. Let it tell the worldling that he or she must soon die.—That death snatches without remorse the mother from the infant, and has all seasons for its own.—That God is full of love to those who trust in the merits of a Saviour, but that they alone have that peace which abideth, and let it urge the sinner to embrace the gracious offers of mercy and come to him who is far more ready to receive than sinners are to go; and let it also whisper to the loved ones of Christ's flock words of comfort, demonstrating as it does the goodness of him who reigns above. He made her to lie down in green pastures, and He led her beside the still waters, He restored her soul, and led her in the paths of righteousness, fearing no evil, she asked her Lord and Master for relief, and then peacefully entered the valley of the shadow of death with her blessed Saviour, and now she dwells in the house of the Lord. Truly our works do follow us as we most from our labors. Who that felt the generous sympathy of the dear one now gone, witnessed her mild submission to the hand of her maker—saw her smile amid her sufferings—heard her kind words of comfort, or gazed upon her looks of love—does not turn with swimming eyes from the contemplation of her loveliness and with kindling gratitude exclaim "it was all of God." "She has reached at last the haven of glory for which her panting thoughts and heaving heart so yearnt. She has looked upon Christ whom her soul adored with an affection so absorbing and intense—has seen angels and talked with those she once knew and loved below, and now slumbers that all behold is gone.

Hysterics while the heavy cages of our tinsight ought never know—those which the heavens eye could never see—those which the mortal ear could never overhear, and sounds such as earth never heard, have burst upon her wondering, blissful spirit. At his feet who died for her and who rose again, adoringly she casts her crown exclaiming worthy is the Lamb ascribing to the Triune Jehovah as we now devoutly do—the praise and glory of all that she was, as a partaker of Life in Jesus, we will rejoice that through his sovereign grace she fought a good fight, finished her course, kept the faith and that now she is gone to the mountain of myrrh, and to the hill of frankincense until the day break and the shadows flee away.—COM.

J. SUTHERLAND & Co.—We beg to call the attention of the Peterboro' public to next advertisement by those gentlemen in to-day's issue. We have known Mr. Sutherland for a long time as an enterprising merchant in Cobourg. His facilities for buying are the best. His knowledge of the business is second to none, and our recollections of him are that he sells a good article at as low a price as it can be sold anywhere. Give him a call.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Monday, July 18th, 1864.

PRESENT—His Worship the Mayor, and Messrs. Burnham, Chambers, McNaughton, Lundy, Eastland, Hamilton, Whyte, Toole and Leonard.

The minutes of previous meeting were read and confirmed.

The Mayor read a communication from Andrew Russell, Assistant Commissioner, stating that the Memorial from the Council in reference to the Road through Harvey, would be submitted to the Commissioner on his return from the West.

Several accounts, amounting to $95,06, were referred to the Finance Committee.

A Report from the Finance Committee, recommending the account of Sidney Smith to be paid, and naming the amount required to be raised during the present year by taxation, viz: $16,235 21, requiring a rate of about 19 cents in the dollar, and urging the duty of practising economy.

On motion of Mr. Toole, a By-law was introduced and read a first time for appointing an Arbitrator on behalf of the Corporation, to decide in conjunction with an arbitrator from the County Council, the amount to be paid by the Town to the County for the use of the Jail for the next five years.

On motion of Mr. Toole, the section showing the grade on Hunter Street, submitted by John Read, was adopted, assuming it to commence at the east side of Water Street.

The Council then adjourned for two weeks.

ARRIVAL OF THE "DAMASCUS."

FATHER POINT, July 18.

The steamer Damascus, which left Liverpool on the afternoon of the 7th and Londonderry on the 8th, passed at 7 p. m., on her way to Quebec.

Rumours very unfavorable to Gen. Grant were prevalent in England. They caused a rise of 2 to 3 per cent in the Confederate loan, which ranged at 65 to 67. It was announced that the amount required for the September dividends and the sinking fund had been received by the London agents.

The London Times, in reviewing Gen. Grant's position, says it is difficult not to conclude that the campaign is now reduced to a question of Petersburg or nothing.

The Morning Star rejoices, in the absence of any great military success, that at least the process of negro emancipation is making great strides.

The Paris correspondent of the Star says the Kearsage would leave Cherbourg on the 5th of July, to cruise in the Channel and watch the movements of the rebel cruisers, or rather cruiser, the Florida being at present the only one to fear.

In the House of Lords, Lord Clanricarde will move an amendment to Lord Malmesbury's motion. He proposes to omit the clause stating that the "just influence of England has been lowered," and insert that the House regrets that Denmark was allowed to expect from the British Government material aid in support of the treaty of 1852."

Prince John of Glucksburg, the youngest brother of the King of Denmark, had reached Berlin—it was supposed in the interest of peace.

A private telegram from Copenhagen says:—It has been determined, at a council of ministers, to treat for peace directly with Prussia, upon the basis of Denmark being admitted into the German confederation, as the only means of saving the monarchy.—This was regarded as highly improbable.

The Austrian embassy at Paris gives a formal denial to the assertions of the London Morning Post, relative to the new holy alliance, and says the alleged letter of Rechberg to Metternich never existed.

The London Owl authoritatively states that Napoleon recently warned Austria against joining the alliance, as he should consider such a measure as directly aimed against France, and that the immediate effect was to cause Austria to hesitate in giving her adhesion to the alliance.

THE BRIGHTEST JEWEL IN THE SPANISH CROWN.—No one will fail to acknowledge the beautiful Island of Cuba is the brightest jewel of Spain. Its climate is the most healthy in the world, and thousands are restored by its genial influences. Yet greater, far greater, is the healing power and restoring influence of Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers on the health of our citizens. They will, if taken early, cure your cold and prevent consumption, and Cuba may be left unvisited and long life enjoyed. 25 cents a box at all Druggists.

OUTBREAK ON THE THAMES.—A general outbreak was made in Chatham to-day by the General of the people, of which he has a large and costly collection. The people broke into the dispensary, and helped themselves to what they could lay their hands on, quarrelling over the articles stolen. Take a bit of Grand Chain Pain Destroyer," with which the Generals Life Preservative" is recommended to cure all colds, colds, coughs in the head, pains in back and sides, &c. Sold by all Medicine Dealers at 25 cts per bottle.

A NECESSITY.—In every house, the bottle of Henry's Vermont Liniment. A burn, a bruise, a toothache that would otherwise go unrelieved, may then be cured. A wise man will take every precaution against accident, so that the time of need will find him well prepared with a remedy. See advertisement in another column for the disorders for which the Liniment is a specific. Sold by all Druggists. Price 25 cts. John F. Henery & Co. Proprietors, 303 St. Paul St. Montreal C. E.

WHAT THEY SAY.—Go to business men for reliable facts. Read the testimony of a merchant.

"Lagrange, N. Y. Feb. 12, 1861.

Messrs. Henry & Co. Your agent left with me a short time ago two dozen bottles of Downs' Elixir. I have sold it all and want more. It is the best lung medicine I ever had.

H. B. REMINGTON."

When dealers speak in its praise, and physicians recommend it, it must possess some virtue. Its sale is constantly on the increase. It is warranted to cure coughs and colds. John F. Henery & Co. Proprietors, 303 St. Paul St. Montreal C. E.

RESTORATION.—Now and then we find those who attain through years of toil, exemplary conduct, clarity and munificence, a position of importance among men,—who are known for the positive "good they do," not what they appear to do; who are shielded from the shafts of scandal and prejudice by their "good deeds seen and known of all men."

We believe that DR. WISTAR, the discoverer of the long tried "Wister's Balsam of Wild Cherry," has done as much for the relief and benefit of poor suffering humanity, and that his memory is as justly entitled to encomiums of respect and gratitude as any philanthropist of our country. This invaluable preparation still maintains an incomparable position among physicians and druggists, and by the people is cherished as a remedy of unsurpassable value for all diseases of the throat and lungs.

We confidently recommend it to our readers when afflicted with pulmonary diseases. —Waterbury American.

We say ditto to the above.

Two countrymen seeing a naturalist in a field collecting insects, one of them asked the other, 'Vot's that ere gennaus?' 'Vy, he's a naturalist.' 'Vot's that?' 'Vy, von who catches goats, to be sure.'

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE

TRENT DIVISION

GENTLEMEN!

An Election will take place in September or October next, when you will be called upon to choose a Member to represent the Trent Division.

Having been elected by your constituents in 1863 to fill up the unexpired time occasioned by the decease of the late Hon. R. Murney, and the resignation of the Hon. Sidney Smith, I have during the past year devoted as much of my time as it was possible for me to do in attending the two Sessions of Parliament, and also in attending to the requests of such of the constituents as have seen fit to honor me with their land and other matters, not immediately connected with Parliamentary duties.

We are about beginning a new era in the history of the politics of our country. The present move in the formation of a Ministry who pledge themselves to bury the feuds of the past, and to work together for the general good of the country, by bringing such measures before the next Session of Parliament as will tend to a final settlement of the sectional difficulties between Upper and Lower Canada, demands our serious consideration.

I may be permitted to state that I shall accord to them a fair trial, and whether in or out of Parliament, to assist by every means in my power the consummation of so desirable an object; trusting that Upper Canada may receive that which she is justly entitled to, and that both Provinces will be greatly benefited by the change.

I have been elected from the numerous personal requests, as also by letters from many parts of the Division, to again place myself at the disposal of the electors, and if again honored with your confidence, to discharge the trust committed to me in as satisfactory a manner as possible.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,
Yours &c. &c.

THE WOODMAN'S ANSWER.

AIR,—"Woodman, spare that tree."

You tell me "spare that tree,"
Nor "touch a single bough;"
But right up, don't you see
I've had it wood this year.

You say "your father's hand"
Had "planted it on that spot?"
But now I own the land.
Because I bought the lot.

'Tis beautiful, no doubt,
But then it's in the way;
And I would have it out,
For beauty does not pay.

If I should "let it stand,"
A fool I'd surely be,
For there is at least a cord
Of firewood in that tree.

SPARE THAT GIRL.

Young men, I pray you,
Kiss not those lips so sweet;
Unruffled let the fair locks curl
Upon the maiden's cheek!
Believe her quite a saint;
Her body hoops—gum,
Her form is—crinoline.

Variétés.

Don't Care if I Do.

In old times, before Maine laws were invented, Wing kept the hotel at middle Granville, and from his well stocked bar furnished accommodation to man and beast.

He was a good man, but terribly deaf. Fish, the village painter, was afflicted in the same way.

One day they were sitting by themselves in the bar room, Wing was behind the bar waiting for a customer, and Fish was looking before the fire with a thirsty look casting sheep's eyes occasionally at Wing's decanters, and thirsting almost devoutly that some one would come in and kin if treat.

A traveller from the south, on his way to Brandon, stopped in to enquire the distance. Seeing up to the counter, he said—

'Can you tell me, sir, how far it is to Brandon?'

'Brandy,' says the hearty landlord, jumping up; 'yes, sir, I have some,' at the same time handing down the decanter of precious liquid.

'You misunderstand me,' said the stranger, 'I asked you how far it was to Brandon?'

'They call it pretty good brandy,' said Wing, 'will you take sugar in it?' reaching, as he spoke, for the bowl and the toddy stick.

The despairing traveller turned to Fish and said—

'The landlord seems to be deaf; will you tell me how far it is to Brandon?'

'Thank you,' said Fish, 'I don't care if I do take a drink with you!'

The stranger treated and left.

THE FRENCHMAN AND THE 'FAST' DAY.—A Frenchman upon the road on a 'Fast Day' told a boy to hold his 'swift.' 'Fast, you mean, don't you sir?' interrogated the lad. 'Vat, fast, too,' said the Frenchman. 'Mais, by gar, I no understand dis.' 'There goes a fast horse!' exclaimed a bystander, as a finely trotting mare passed by. 'A Hare-ie stuff' narrowly inquired the astonished Frenchman; 'zare is von horse fast, and he goes like zunder all de time; zare is my horse, he is fast, too, and he never—' 'Throws a Exeter in the road,' said another. 'Eh, Exeter?' said monsieur, 'vy dis is fast day; everything is fast; de horse zat goes is fast, and ze folks zat eat nothing and eat it slow is fast. By gar, vot a country!'

An old lady who was making some jam was called away by a neighbor. 'Sam, you rascal,' she said, 'you'll be eating my jam when I'm away.' Sam protested he'd die first; but the whites of his eyes rolled towards the bubbling crimson. 'See here, Sam,' said the old lady, taking up a piece of chalk, 'I'll chalk your lips, and then on my return I'll know if you're eaten any.' So saying, she passed her forefinger heavily over the thick lips of her donkey, holding the chalk in the palm of her hand and not letting it touch him. When she came back, she did not need to ask any question, for Sam's lips were chalked a quarter of an inch thick.

IMPORTANCE OF PUNCTUATION.—A poor woman, whose husband was going to sea, handed to the clergyman, through the clerk, A paper, on which was written, 'A man going to sea, his wife desires the prayers of the congregation.' The clergyman, inadvertently, no doubt, misplaced the comma, and announced, 'A man going to see his wife, desires the prayers of this congregation.'

SOFT SOAP FOR ALL SORTS OF PEOPLE.—For a lieutenant, call him captain. For a middle-aged lady, kiss her, and say that you mistook her for her daughter. For a young gentleman who differs with you in opinion respecting the comparative merits of Mechi and Murphy as razor-sellers. For young ladies, if you know their color to be natural, accuse them of painting.

A diamond ring given by a noble lord to his lordship's tailor was present, whom he thus accosted: 'My dear sir, I recollect your face, but cannot remember your name.' 'Sir, I am your brother,' whispered the tailor. 'His lordship, taking him by the hand, said aloud, 'Major Bridges, I'm very glad to see you!'

WELL DONE, JOHN!—John, said a doting mother to her gormandizing son, 'do you really think you can eat the whole of that pudding with impunity?' 'I don't know, ma,' replied the young hopeful; 'but I guess I can with a spoon.'

A WORD OF EXPLANATION.—If a young lady 'throws herself away' she understand she has married for love; if she is 'comfortably settled,' understand that she has married a wealthy old man whom she hates.

APPRENTICE.—Gentleman (to his young clerk): 'Well, sir, did you present the account to the defendant?' Boy—'Yes, sir.' 'Well, what did he say?' Boy—'He told me to go to the deuce, sir!'

When Lord Lauderdale laughed at one of Sheridan's jests and promised to repeat it, Sheridan entreated him to refrain from doing so; 'Otherwise, my dear lord,' said he, 'your mouth is no laughing matter.'

'What a pity, mamma, that pigs were his best sweetmeats.' 'Why, my dear?' 'Why, because he said that eminent Mr. Crabstick did nothing but pick holes in it.'

A correspondent asks if it would be pardonable to call a crowd of extensively booped ladies a full hoop.

A woman is like her—don't her, and she will take any form you plear.

THE SELF-EMPTYING

WATER-DRAWER.

THE undersigned, while thanking the public in general for the liberal patronage they have bestowed on him, since his commencement in business, begs to state that he continues to manufacture his celebrated

PATENT WATER-DRAWER!

AT BLYTHE MILLS.

You must remember that by buying one of my Water-drawers, you get your water pure, which you cannot do by a suction Pump. I warrant them not to freeze, and to stand as long, if not longer, than any Pump; and, besides, you save over fifty per cent. I can sell them cheaper than any Pump-maker in Canada! If anything goes astray by fair play within one year from the time of purchase, I bind myself to re-place it; so you cannot be deceived. Now, any one who is in need of a Pump would do well to get one of my Water-drawers at once. I have two teams out at all times to deliver them, and persons residing at a distance will receive prompt attention by sending a letter to the undersigned

N. H. DOWN'S VEGETABLE BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

A CERTIFICATE WORTH A MILLION.

An Old Physician's Testimony.

READ:

Waterbury, Vt.,
Nov. 24th, 1858.

Although I do not like the practice of Physicians recommending indiscriminately, the patent medicines of the day; yet after a trial of ten years, I am free to admit that there is one medicine beloved by the public that any Physician can use in his practice, and recommend to the public with perfect confidence; that medicine is Rev. N. H. Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

I have used it myself with the very best success, and now, whenever I am troubled with a Cough or Cold, I invariably use it. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are suffering from a Cold or a Cough, for the Croup, Whooping Cough, and all diseases tending to consumption, and to the Profession as a reliable article.

I am satisfied of its excellence beyond a doubt, having conversed personally with the Rev. N. H. Downs about it. He informed me of the principal ingredients of which the Elixir is composed, all of which are purely Vegetable and perfectly safe.

J. B. WOODWARD, M.D.
Now Brigade Surgeon U. S. Army.

This old, time-tried, standard remedy still maintains its popularity. When all others have proved inefficient, the Elixir alone continues to give satisfaction.—Use it for

COUGHS, COLDS, CATARRH, ASTHMA, CROUP,

Incipient consumption and all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs.

Thirty years ago the Elixir first shook its appearance; and even then, in its primitive and imperfect state, produced such extraordinary results that it became, at once, a general favourite. Many have made it, what it really is, a Family Medicine.

For as more than half the diseases "to which flesh is heir," originate from colds, so this may be considered a general preventive of all diseases, by removing the primeval cause.

ADULTS

Should always keep this Family Physician at hand; and by its timely use save hundreds of dollars that would otherwise be swallowed up in discharging doctor's fees.

☞ Sold at every Drug and country store throughout Canada.

Price 25cts., 50cts., $1 pr. Bottle.

TANNER'S GERMAN OINTMENT

Give Honor to whom Honor is due.

TANNER'S GERMAN OINTMENT is an article that has long been tested in South America and the United States, and is recommended by many Doctors in their practice for [illegible] Inflammations, Sore Eyes, Sick Headache, Tetter, Salt Rheum, &c. We will leave the facts to judge for themselves of the virtue of this Ointment by reading the certificates below. [illegible] Burning, Tetter, and Salt Rheum that [illegible] by Scrofula

(From a Minister.)

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,

Your German Ointment I have used and find it really a very good article for Salt Rheum. I have also used it on one time that I was compelled to have my pulpit, one after using it by touching it into my eyes for a short time, my eyes began to grow stronger and get better. I am now able to read print as far off as any person.

Respectfully yours,
Rev. MILNOR W. BOSTS.

Cold Water, Mich.,
Sept. 14, 1863.

REMARKS.

If a person breaks his limb he does not expect to get cured by any Ointment; but for a Family Ointment, this is considered the best in the Market. Dr. Tanner, the inventor, who is an old physician, has used this Ointment in his practice for over forty years. At the present time, there are millionaires' homes made every years, keeping a great many hands at the laboratory employed to prepare it. The Ointment does not contain any ingredient injurious to either man or beast.

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,

I was in the summer of 1860 afflicted with the rheumatism [illegible] I used your German Ointment [illegible] as you directed for about two weeks, when I began to get better. I am now able to walk without crutches and consider myself cured. I most heartily recommend your Ointment to the public as a good remedy for the Rheumatism.

Yours very truly,
Rev. GIDEON VERPLANK.

Skaneateles, N. Y.
July 21st, 1863.

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,

Your letter of 31st inst., is received, asking me if I were cured of the piles by the use of your Ointment. When you first recommended to me your German Ointment for the piles, I had little or no faith in it. I used it for two weeks. I am now entirely well. I was so bad at that time, I was compelled to keep my bed. I have no hesitancy in giving you my letter for publication as I think every body afflicted ought to try it.

Very respectfully,
Hon. EZRA CONN.

Branch County, Michigan,
October 3rd, 1863.

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,

I have used your German Ointment for sick headache and think it the best remedy I can use.

Respectfully yours,
MRS. MARIA H

Select Poetry.

The World would be the Better for It.

If men cared less for wealth and fame,
And less for battle-field's glory;
If writ in human hearts a name
Seemed better than in song and story;
If men, instead of nursing pride,
Would learn to bale it and abhor it—
If more relied
On love's unerring guide,
The world would be the better for it.

If men dealt less in stocks and lands
And more in deeds and bonds fraternal;
If Love's work had more willing hands
To link man's world to the supernal;
If men agreed up Love's oil and wine,
And on bruised human hearts would pour it
If "yours" and "mine"
Would cease to combine,
The world would be the better for it.

If more would act the play of life
And fewer spoil it in rehearsal;
If Bigotry would sheath its knife
Till good becomes more universal,
If Customs, gray with ages grown,
Had fewer blind men to adore it—
If talent shone
In truth alone—
The world would be the better for it.

If men were wise in Wide Things,
Affecting less in all their dealings;
If hearts had fewer rusted strings
To isolate their friendly feelings;
If men, when Wrong bears down the Right,
Would strike together and restore it,
If Right made Might
In every fight,
The world would be the better for it.

THE TWO PICTURES.

BY STUART MILLER.

Edward Glen was going home one night in the dusk. Well, I'm not quite sure if he was going straight home, for there happened to be a half way house, at a certain corner, which somehow he could never get past, when he had a sixpence in his pocket. He was on the way home, however, when he met an old fellow-apprentice whom he hadn't seen for an age.

'Why, where on earth have you been all this while, Glen?' exclaimed Frank Dysart. 'We've been on the hunt after you ever since we came to the town.'

'I work at Mossam's Foundry,' said Edward confusedly.

'All right,' returned Frank, 'but you must take a cup of tea with us to-night, and we will return the compliment one of these days.'

'I promised that I would be early home to-night,' began Edward, but his old friend caught him by the arm, and wheeled him round with an air of resolution.

'Our crib is not a hundred miles off, and your wife won't grudge an old comrade half-an-hour. Any way, Edward, you must look in and see the old woman and the children,' and it was no use begging off.

'I know you've been one of the lucky ones, Frank,' said Edward Glen, as they walked along.

'Luck's all nonsense, Glen,' said Frank; 'my belief is, that every man has his fortune in his own hands, with God's blessing.'

'Then, depend upon it, there's a screw loose somewhere, if the machinery won't work,' laughed Frank; 'but this is our cabin door.'

Edward Glen stared, as well he might, when Frank pointed to a handsome cottage, with a pretty flower-garden in front, and a goodly piece of well cultivated ground behind.

Two, rosy, smart children came running through the primroses and violets to welcome them.

'You have had a windfall, Frank,' said Edward in amazement.

'Yes, you cherry tree in the farthest corner was a windfall,' answered Frank, with great gravity; 'but, thank goodness, there was no worse damage done that fearful night.'

That was not exactly what Edward Glen meant, but he smiled, and followed Frank in silence through the perfumed path to the jessamine porch.

'One, two, three, four fire—half-a-dozen to keep in grub. Frank must have found a purse,' thought Edward.

'Nice situation this, isn't it Glen?' said Frank, pausing to watch the setting sun's golden glory.

'But rents must be high in this quarter,' said Edward.

Frank gave a short laugh, 'Well, most of us up here are our own landlords.'

No, no, Frank had got money left him, lucky fellow.

'I wish somebody would leave me a legacy, Frank.'

'Bah! I wouldn't be any one's beggar as long as I could make my own way,' said Frank, proudly. 'We are obliged to nobody for what we have; and half the pleasure we enjoy is from our glorious independence.'

'What are you talking about?' asked a smiling little woman, laying her head affectionately on Frank's shoulder.

'Ah, I was just saying, wife—but don't you see an old friend, Mamie?

Esther Dysart was dressed like a lady.—What was the secret of all his prosperity. A glance inside discovered a comfortably furnished house, and abundance of everything. The tea was scrupulously served with ham, and fresh-laid eggs, and newly churned butter, and cream, and hot cakes and jellies. "Upon my word," thought Edward, 'Frank's got a rise, and no mistake.'

After tea, the boys brought their prizes, to show father's friend. These rough, tearing lads, that weren't kept on nothing; smart chaps, though, and far ahead with their education for their size.

'Who helped Frank?' that was what Edward wanted to know.

'My wife helps me,' laughed Frank. 'she spends the money; that's her department.'

'But you've got a tremendous rise since you came to town,' said Edward.

'Well, I have, Glen,' candidly answered Frank; 'I am a freeman, now.'

'You?' instinctively exclaimed Edward Glen.

'By sheer determination, and perseverance,' continued Frank, with a smile.—'You know I wasn't a bright particular star at the outset, Glen.'

Edward Glen knew that well.

'But a growing family put me to my mettle, and so with God's help, I got along.

'But you say this house is your own; and your life's insured?

'Oh, the cottage is not quite paid up yet,' said Frank, 'but it's on the way for it, and we are close with everything else,' he added, gaily catching up his youngest baby, and whirling him over his head.

'I wish you would tell me your secret, Dysart,' said Edward Glen, as Frank walked to the garden gate with him.

'We have no bottles in our house,' said Frank, 'and I don't turn in at the corner, on my way home, Glen.'

Edward reddened.

'You've always kept your teetotal principles.'

'Yes, that's the secret of our prosperity,' said Frank. 'If I had yielded to drink with my dad head I would have stuck at the foot of the ladder; and what's saved off the beer goes into good investment.'

'What a downright idiot I have been,' muttered Edward Glen, as he wended his way homewards. 'That fellow hadn't half the chance I had when we began together, and he is a lord compared to what I am to-day—curse drink. If it hadn't been for it I might have been better off than the Dysarts, poor weak fool.'

But there's the brilliant lamp that has so often guided his unsteady steps into the 'Golden Fleece,' flinging him a friendly gleam; he scowls at it as if it were a snare to fleece him. The smiling landlady stands at the door; he passes without a word, and never halts till he comes to his own door, and then he half recoils with a feeling of disgust, the contrast in his own home is so great.

Bare floors, black grates, crying children—crying with hunger and cold, poor things, and a pale weary wife, hanging over a dirty wash tub, by the light of a cracked lantern. How could any man be expected to come home with pleasure to a miserable scene like this? It was quite different with Frank Dysart. What his home was like a palace! Of course he wasn't to blame, it was his wife; and full of indignation he went in and abused poor Sarah for not being a better housewife, and making his home attracting. He was perfectly sober, but Sarah seemed to doubt it. She looked at him pitifully, but made no answer. And in this she showed her wisdom. It is said speech is silver, but silence is gold sometimes.

Edward Glen was not a bad tempered man; a little hot when he was raised perhaps, but his anger blew off in no time when he was sober. But he was annoyed with himself to-night, and when that is the case conscience is not so easily pacified. He stormed longer than usual, but when he could make nothing more of it, he sat down sulkily at his cheerless hearth.

'What are you squalling for?' he asked, as he roughly shook a thin white-faced little object shivering on the floor.

'I'm so, so hungry,' sobbed the little one.

'Can't you give them some supper,' said Glen, addressing his wife.

'We have no bread in the house, to-night, Edward,' said Sarah, meekly, 'but I will have money to-morrow, when the linens are sent home, dear.'

'And have you no coals either, Sarah,' he asked.

'There is one piece left, but we must be sparing.'

'It's a cold night though,' said Edward; 'let's have a fire for once, woman, and there's a shilling to get a loaf and butter.'

'Oh, mother let me go for the loaf,' cried little Tilly, clapping her hands. 'I shan't loose the money; oh do, I'm starving, and so are Johny and you, mother.'

'There then, run as fast as you can, Tilly,' said her father, wrapping the shilling in a piece of paper, 'and get a cake for yourself, or anything you like, child; here's another sixpence.' He hid his face behind Johnny's curly head, for there were tears in his eyes

Wondering much at the change that had come over Edward, Sarah broke the last lump of coal in the house and made a good fire, and when she had tidied up the hearth and set away the tubs, and smartened herself up a bit, she took courage to ask if he had got his wages advanced?

'Not yet; but I expect something of that sort, if I keep in the mind I'm in just now,' he answered.

'But, if I had known you were coming home so soon to-night, I would have been in much better order,' said Sarah.

'You can't make this hovel look much better,' replied Edward, with a dash of bitterness.

'Perhaps we shall see better times yet,' said Sarah, hardly knowing what to say.

'Well, I'd blow out my brains to-night, if I didn't hope so,' said her husband.

Poor Sarah feared he had gone out of his mind he looked so wild and strange; but next morning he was more composed, and went out as his work quietly. In the evening he came home straight from the foundry.

'He is out of money,' thought Sarah; 'when pay-day comes he won't pass the Golden Fleece.'

But fancy her surprise when, instead of staggering in with a bare shilling or two close on midnight, he came in smiling before it was dark, and flung his unbroken wages into her lap.

'There, Sarah, and before long, if God gives me strength, I will have twice that sum to give you on pay day.'

Poor thing, she burst into tears, and fell sobbing on his neck.

'I've been a downright idiot and a brute to you, Sarah, for all your goodness,' said Edward, with a husky voice. 'I didn't deserve such a wife.'

'Oh, don't say that, dear Edward,' sobbed Sarah. 'You were always kind but for drink.'

'Well, you will forgive me, Sue, I see,' interrupted Edward, kissing her soft cheek, 'and we will begin life again on Frank Dysart's principle. No bottles in the house, and a clear head always to make road upwards.'

'Oh, thank God, thank God,' murmured Sarah.'

'I do, with all my heart, for leading me to a noble example to open my blind eyes,' said her husband.

After tea, they went out together to make some purchases, and went the way the neighbours were surprised to see Edward Glen going with his wife to church; but find they looked in at dinner, and saw the blazing fire and the well-set table, they would have got a surprise. A whole joint of mutton at the head and roasted potatoes, and a jolly plum-pudding, because it was Sunday.

Said little Johnny to Tilly, in a whisper, as he finished his pudding. 'I think we must have died and gone to heaven, if it's to be always like this.'

NEW YORK AS IT IS.

Mr. Sala is now in the empire city, and sends home a picture of the state and feeling of society there while rebellion ravages her more fruitful States, and while the armies of the Republic, swayed to and fro in a doubtful contest, are agonizing in the wilderness. The special commissioner of the Daily Telegraph writes as follows:—"Luxury was never more rampant than now. Never did Extravagance hold up her painted face more shamelessly, or flaunt her diamonds and laces with a more defiant mein. I sate at a parlor window high up on the Fifth-Avenue on Sunday afternoon last, and for an hour and a half watched one interminable procession of ladies, gentlemen and children—nine-tenths of their number splendidly attired—file by. Both sides of the road; both had their continuous throng of beaux and belles. Splendid is the only word by which the costume in vogue can be expressed. If the men are by their sex debarred from wearing brocaded silks and lace mantles, and camels'-hair shawls worth a thousand dollars a piece; if they cannot brave the sun in hundred dollar bonnets, and in sachinees and armlets, and 'round tires like the moon,' as did those women against whom Ezekiel prophesied, at least they can appear in velvet coats and varnished boots, with gold chains winding like many coiled serpents round their bodies—with rings, and breast-pins, and studs, and sleeve-buttons of great price. The looms of Lyons seem to have been exhausted in furnishing bright coloured scarfs for the New York dandies. Primrose, and pink, and pea-green, and cream-colored kid gloves meet the eye at every turn. Shoddy wears its sapphire, or its diamond, or its signet ring outside its glove; and Shoddy, I have little doubt, regrets that the mode has not yet sanctioned a fringe of pearls to the hat, or a golden stripe down each leg of the pantaloons. The ladies, however, amply compensate for the slight restriction suffered by the rader sex in the way of gorgeous fabrics and resplendent jewellery. When a man thinks of the modest frocks his wife wears at home and of the innocent artifices and diplomatic endearments to which even the wealthy English spouse has occasion to resort whenever she wants more than two bonnets in a fortnight, she might at dumb and amazed, as I did, at the hundreds upon hundreds of towering structures in wire, gauze, artificial flowers, and lace, that came marching on in Fifth-Avenue.

What do you think of a daughter of Chrysel who flutters down at the watering-place of Newport with a box containing nine dresses and nine bonnets? She stops nine days, just long enough to wear a new dress and a new bonnet every day. Then she moves to Saratoga—nine more dresses dresses and nine more bonnets. Then she flies to Niagara—the nine again. And then she comes back to New York for more dresses and more bonnets. By the way, they call a lady's dress here a 'robe,' and a bonnet a 'hat.' It is more Parisian; it sounds dearer. Finally, what do you think of a lady who gives a ball, and appears with a coronal of diamonds lit up with jets of gas! Upon my word, fellow countrymen, this thing was done the other night in New York city. Where was the reservoir? In her hoop-skirt, I presume, and an elastic pipe must have passed through one of her 'Niagara' or 'entrancé curls'—the same given to the shower of true or false ringlets the ladies are in the habit of wearing on their heads. Unlike Providence the gas-lit lady didn't blow up; and, after astonishing the company for a few minutes with her resemblement head-dress, she suffered herself to be turned off. It has come to this. When Madame Vellica appeared at a ball in a costume so diaphonous that an anonymous admirer, thinking she intended to impersonate Eve, sent her the next morning a fig leaf, it was thought much; when a proud English Duchess powdered her hair with gold it was deemed that the acme of extravagance in dress had been reached; but a diadem of carburetted hydrogen! a wreath of flame blazes! Of 'whiskey in the hair,' as a complaint suffered in the morning by gentlemen who have taken too much Bourbon overnight, I have certainly heard, but never until now of gas in the hair."

CULTIVATION OF TOMATOES.—The French method is as follows:—As soon as a cluster of flowers is visible they top the stems down to the cluster, so that the flowers terminate the stem. The effect is, that the sap is immediately impelled into the two buds next below the cluster, which soon push strongly and produce another cluster of flowers each. When these are visible, the branch to which they belong is also topped down to their level; and this is done five times in succession. By this means the plants become stout, dwarf bushes, not above eighteen inches high. In addition to this, all the laterals whatsoever, are nipped off. In this way the ripe sap is directed into the fruit, which acquires a beauty, size and excellence unattainable by any other means.

A Second Witness.

An old man of very acute physiognomy, answered to the name of Joseph Wilmot, was brought before the police court. His clothes looked as if they might have been brought second hand, to his youthful person, for they had suffered more from the rubs of the world than the proprietor himself.

What business do you follow, Mr. Wilmot?

Business? None; I'm a traveler.

A vagabond, perhaps.

You are not far wrong; vagabonds and vagabonds are about the same thing. The difference is, that the latter travel without money, and the former without baggage.

Where have you traveled?

All over the continent.

For what purpose?

Observation.

What have you observed?

A little to commend, much to censure, and very much to laugh at.

Umph! and what do you commend?

A handsome woman that will stay at home, an eloquent preacher that will preach a short sermon, a good writer that will not write one month, and a thief who has sense enough to hold his tongue.

What do you censure?

A man who marries a girl for her fine clothing, a youth who studies law or medicine while he has the use of his hands, and people who elect a drunkard or blockhead to public office.

What do you laugh at?

Though at a man who expects his position to command that respect which his personal qualities and qualifications do not merit.

He was dismissed.

A GRAVE MISTAKE.—Perhaps all our readers are not aware that there is stationed at Prescott a military look-out party, whose duty is to board the trains which arrive at, depart from, or pass Prescott, in search of deserters from Her Majesty's service. Well, it happened that one of these look-out gentlemen, who, for the sake of disguise, dressed up in civilian's dress, stepped on board the up-train at Cornwall, on Wednesday last, and proceeded to inspect the male inmates of the different cars. A person dressed his attention to an individual of a military bearing, and a part of whose dress was unquestionably of a military cut, who sat snugly ensconced in a seat by himself, speaking to one, and seeming to be in a state of dreamy unconsciousness. From his appearance the look-out man thought he might belong to the Guards, and if so was altogether too fine a soldier to lose. He therefore tapped the stranger, and awaking him from a sound sleep, put the usual enquiries regarding his destination, his regiment, his pass, &c., to all of which the supposed deserter responded with an air of indignation and injured innocence, and gave the look-out man to understand that he was mistaken in supposing him to be a deserter. But Mr. "look-out" being accustomed to these protestations of innocence on the part of disguised deserters stuck to his man until some gentleman whose attention was attracted by the rather suious nature of the altercation, stepped forward and informed him that the person whom he suspected of being a deserter from the Guards, was a gentleman of the highest respectability, being, in fact, no less a personage than the Editor and Proprietor of the Brockville Recorder.—Brockville Telegraph.

THE NEW REGIMENT.—The Hamilton Spectator says:—It is fortunate that white slaves is being excited in England, an attempt is being made here to raise a regiment of the line similar to the 100th. So far as we can learn there is a fair prospect of the attempt being successful. Quite a number of persons in the city have agreed to take commissions; and it is said there will be no difficulty in raising the required number of men, nine hundred. The move is a truly patriotic one, and we sincerely hope it may meet with full encouragement. In a matter of this kind there can be no selfishness, because those concerned in it have little to expect in the shape of emolument. The regiment, when raised, will be placed on the same footing as the regular regiments of the line; or, if the Government here should see fit, they can give employment to the regiment for Colonial purposes. We hear that a great deal of enthusiasm exists in this city with regard to the movement. The proper authority has been asked for, and, as a matter of course, it will be granted. Every encouragement should be given to the endeavour to raise a second Colonial regiment in our midst; because it would give the most complete answer to those who in the British House of Commons are talking despondingly of the feel of this Province. We will certainly wish the progress made by those in getting up the new regiment. The matter is in good hands, and we have no doubt that success will attend the efforts of those who are engaged in showing that patriotism is not yet extinct among us.

DEATH OF A BOUNTY-JUMPER.—On Monday night the American Express Company brought here the body of a notorious bounty-jumper, known as Webb Moore, but whose proper name is said to have been Carlisle. His career was a chequered one; and had he devoted half as much energy to some legitimate pursuit as he did to his nefarious practices, he might have made himself wealthy. He had succeeded in successfully securing eleven bounties, and at the time he was shot, he was in the ranks as a substitute. From a certificate of the medical authorities of Baltimore hospital, we learn that he was shot by the guard after having jumped from the train when in motion, as it was nearing Baltimore. The last time that he took the bounty he was sent to the front, where he remained three months in service watching an opportunity to escape; and when he got free he vowed that he would never go there again; and it was in endeavoring to carry out this resolution that he met his death.—Essex Record.

The friends of Mr. United States Treasury, Hon. S. P. Chase—the rebels of their "green-backs."

A debating society has under consideration the question, "Is a young man about a house?" The result is expected to be, "No! but he's about."

A gentleman had occasion to advertise for a cook, and, among other qualifications, was one from a young lady of the profession, combining her duties de cuisine.

Some fashion met on the wharf yesterday, and passed the compliments of the season. "He said, here you see Hall! he is looking for you. Hall, what Hall? was Jim's answer. Why also-hall, you fool! Didn't you see Jim, that's a poor call and you wouldn't have caught me if I hadn't been hurt last night when John tripped me up. John who, said Jim. Dentiste, you numskull.

OLD AGE'S CROWN.—A gentleman in conversation remarked to President Lincoln on Friday that nothing could defeat him but Grant's capture of Richmond, to be followed by his nomination at Chicago and acceptance. "Well," said the president, "I feel very much like the man who said he didn't want to die particularly, but if he had got to die, that was precisely the distance he would like to die at."—N. Y. Times.

A newly married couple at Studley, Eng., lately decided to have grandmamma's arm-chair re-stuffed in her absence, and sent it away for the purpose. The old lady, returning, astonished them by saying that there was $5400 among the horsehair. The chair was sent for and the cash recovered. Further inquiries realized the fact that an old petticoat which had been consigned to the rag bag contained a number of notes-promise stitched into the waistband.

CEMENT FOR MENDING GLASS, MARBLE, CRYSTAL, EARTHENWARE, &c.—White shellac, 1 oz., dissolved in 2 oz., of spirits of wine, 10 grains of borax dissolved in 2 drachms of sulphuric ether. After the ingredients are dissolved, put them together. Put it on the edges of the broken ware with a brush or feather; then burn it off with a spirit light. Put the pieces together, bind them until they set, and they will be as firm as they were before they were broken.

TO WASH FLANNEL WITHOUT SHRINKING.—Make a strong suds and put in your flannel or white woolen stockings; while water is boiling hot. Then squeeze and pound them with a pestle till the water is cool enough to put your hands in to work. You will find that there is little need of rubbing. Rinse in water as hot as the hands will bear. If there is a little soap remaining in the rinsing water, it is better. The colour they are dried the less they will shrink.

A sturdy sergeant of one of the Massachusetts regiments being obliged to submit to the amputation of his hand, the surgeon offered to administer chloroform as usual; but the veteran refused, saying—"If the cutting you to be done on him, he wanted to see it;" and laying his arm on the table, submitted to the operation without a sign of pain, except a firmer shutting of his teeth as the saw struck the marrow. The operator, as he finished, looked at his victim with admiration, and remarked—"You ought to have been a surgeon, my man." "I was the next thing to one afore I enlisted," said the hero. "What was that?" asked the doctor. "A butcher" responded the sergeant with a grim smile, which, despite the surroundings, communicated itself to the bystanders.

LIVES SAVED BY CRINOLINE.—An Irish paper relates a remarkable incident that recently occurred on the river Shannon. A little pleasure boat was capsized in the deep tideway, at an angle of the river, and three young ladies, with their three friends of the masculine species, were at once immersed. The males were submerged by their specific gravity, but the females though thrown in a queer way into the water, righted at once, like those toys that, however dropped, always stay upright, and, borne erect by the natant crinoline, floated down the surface of the pellucid stream, objects of honor, regard and admiration. The singular utility of the crinoline, owing to the stiffening, or the caoutchouc, was shown in the fact that it never split, collapsed, or exploded for the hundreds of yards over which it carried the nymphs before the eyes of the admiring hundreds; but on the contrary, remained spread and unrolled, like a stately birds plumage, bearing the females into shoal water at last.

GOLD IN EARNEST.—We (Montreal Herald) have heard a great deal about Canadian gold, and have seen some tolerably large nuggets in geological collections; but it was only Sunday that we saw for the first time something like a "pile," in the Californian or Australian sense, of gold which we knew to have been mined in Canada. This beautiful heap of pure metal was turned out on our table by Colonel Rankin, who had just come to town from the Chaudiere region, and has brought with him a couple of very nice bags of between $500 and $400 value, a small portion of it to pioneer about the size of a flattened buckshot, the rest in nuggets varying from the bulk of a golden half-dollar up to one of the value of $106. The whole of this gold comes from the property belonging to Colonel Rankin which he has divided off into allotments for actual workers, having in military phrase subdivided the miners all along the supposed direction of the lead of the vein, so as to develope it in different parts of the length. He informs us that every one seems to be well satisfied with the produce, and that he could have procured thousands of dollars as readily as hundreds had he chosen to purchase there. He exhibited the plunder to a number of gentlemen in town, and there can be no doubt that it conclusively establishes the presence of gold in quantities capable of yielding an adequate return for labor in a large part of our Lower Canada territory. The gold in question came from the Gilbert, but Colonel Rankin says that the same indications prevail upon the du Loup and all the other tributaries of the Chaudiere, and that all promise to be alike productive.

THE INSANITY OF SOME CHANGE.

"In summer possess your souls"—is an old and good advice, and we have need to exercise the virtue of patience in the present important time. It seems long to wait ere we can fully understand the revolution we are to experience, but doubtless it is better as it is. The matter will be fully discussed, and the parties to whom the change has been entrusted will have had not only time fully to prepare the measure, but the aid of almost every thinking mind in the Province in preparing it. Public opinion exercises an immense influence in modern times, and editors of papers, the exponents of public opinion, are immensely aided in moulding their thoughts by conversation with their intelligent readers. It is every man's duty then, duly to weigh the arguments both in favor of the great constitutional change proposed and the contrary, and dispassionately to talk the matter over. It is of no use to look at it from a party point of view. It matters little to the issue whether George Brown originated the movement or if John A. McDonald took the initiative, pressed to the starting point by his opponents in the house. The necessity of some change is admitted on almost every side—we have carefully consulted the greater part of the Upper Canada press, and with very few exceptions, they are in favor of the proposed alteration. We can scarcely conceive of an Upper Canadian being dissatisfied with the change. One would think that the necessity of the thing would be evident to all, yet there are some papers, followers of Mr. Beattie of the Leader, who sulk at those who look on it with favour—we do this from ignorance, others again because Mr. Brown, a man whom they both fear and hate, is the originator and as he should be, the leader in the movement. We venture to say had the matter originated sole. ly with Mr. McDonald and his party that the only men now opposed to it, would have been the most strenuous supporters of it. "Men not Measures" is their policy—they reverse the order of things. We hope they will meet the fate they court and certainly deserve—the contempt of men of all parties. We feel glad that the change took place when Messrs. Cartier and McDonald were in power. The very fact that it was so, turned many of the press in the Upper Province to their policy. They had the public printing and were duly to come out openly against the change, they might bring punishment on themselves—they might loose the pap.

It cannot be out of the recollection of our readers, that in an article nearly three months ago, we stated that the rivalry between the two parties, Upper and Lower Canada, had become so strong that our leading statesmen did not know "what to do with it." Nor was this to be wondered at, when we take into consideration the state of the two parties. Lower Canada was added to the British Empire by conquest, and the people living there though never treated as a conquered people—still all along felt like the gentleman whose reputation was none of the best—that every thing that was said or done was aimed at him. The people of Lower Canada dreaded, that their language, their laws or their religion above all, should be interfered with. Almost to a man subjects of the Pope, they could ill brooke the interference of a half protestant Legislature; and like their co-religionists of Upper Canada, they hung well together. Nearly always were they found voting on the same side, and quite as often were they found opposed to any measure desired by the Upper Canada Reform party. This would not have been felt to be so oppressive by the people of Upper Canada, had their fellow countrymen voted thus in matters only that concerned themselves, but, unfortunately having the power, the French determined to exercise it, and carried by force, as we may call it, many measures not only galling but positively oppressive to their Upper Canada brethren. In all matters in regard to education, to grants of public money for religious or charitable purposes, they made themselves felt; consequently there are many Legislative acts on the statute book in reference to Upper Canada which if her people had been the only party consulted would never have disgraced its pages. In matters of finance too, they had the lion's share, contributing not more than one-fourth of the revenue, they always appropriations half of the proceeds. Knowing the share of taxation they would have to pay would be a small one, they were willing to go into debt any amount. It would have been impossible for them to have done this all of themselves. But they were aided time and again by a few men from the Upper Province, often needy adventurers who went to the house for no other object but a share of the spoils, and we presume there are not many men in the country who doubt that the Upper Canadians who in so patronized the province for the last ten years up the aid of the French, have squandered on themselves and their friends millions of the public money.

Such a state of matters could not continue. There were men in the Upper Province who had long seen that the wholesale way of conducting the politics of the country was unjust and these men began to talk of the matter. At first the running who protested against the injustice were very few, and though they lifted up their voices loud enough still they had little influence, but by degrees—the little band grew larger—and their influence was more felt, and then it was their cause was in danger, the thing had become popular in the country, and on the cry of justice to Upper Canada many men rode into the House who had no heart in the work, but in as far as it would bring them gain. These men were brought and sold and had to be bought and sold again. For years the reform question was sadly at a discount, and seemed as if it was abandoned altogether, but the originators of the measure, though often almost despairing, never abandoned it. Such men as Mr. Kellan McKenzie and Mr. Wilson still continued to agitate the matter. Conventions took it up, and began to be known as reform conventions for the opposition, and no wise hesitancy in their efforts to recover the rights of the people which were the first object that took place. Small mercy was shown to traitors then, and had we been called to have another general election, we believe that Upper Canada would have been pretty well purged of men who opposed the needed change. For two or three years parties have been very evenly balanced, and French domination was felt to be more odious; we do not see how it could be otherwise. Every Upper Canadian felt that if any section of the Province should rule, it ought to be the Upper Province. What was the fact, we were numerically stronger than the other section by 100,000 souls. We contributed over 70 per cent of the revenue, whilst the industrial products of Upper Canada were more than four times as great as those of the lower Province, and yet although we produced most, paid most and were the greatest in numbers—yet we were treated like an inferior race, our just requirements refused, our complaints laughed at, and the public money wrung from the hard earnings of our sons, spent chiefly in Lower Canada or in buying up corrupt and time serving constituencies and their representatives in the Upper Province.

It is monstrous but yet too true that the men who advocated a change under such circumstances, have been hounded throughout the Province as the most odious of mankind—they have literally been hounded down and were it not that their patriotism was pure and their faith in the justice of the cause strong, they would surely long ere this have given up the matter in despair. Every one recollects the abuse that was heaped on the head of Mr. Brown. It will surely not be a breach of confidence if we state that in a private conversation held with him in the end of last May, he stated that "for the last ten years he had fought that Upper Canada battle, and that which of many of his personal friends—but he had never felt doubtful of the issue, than even then, though things looked extremely dark, he had hope that justice to Upper Canada would not long be delayed." To our saying, that it must be an unpleasant life to lead, to be abused and misconstrued at every step, and to have so many of the members of the opposition press constantly vilifying him, he stated that "it was true that it was unpleasant, and that, were it not that he considered it his duty to urge the matter he would long ago, from personal motives, have retired from public life, but added—" he had great pleasure in stating that he had been well sustained by the reform press throughout the country and lib. eral journals abroad, and what was of more consequence, he had been sustained by the good wishes of four-fifths of the protestant population of Upper Canada, whilst his most bitter enemies, were, many of them, men of little influence, and others again whose only motive for abusing him was the hope that he would retaliate and thus make something of them by drawing public attention to them. That as soon as the reform he had been so long contending for was about to be obtained, these men would, most likely proclaim themselves to have been the first to see the necessity for the change."

THE AMERICAN WAR.

It would be difficult to find any other subject on which so much has been written and so little satisfaction given. We have been asked: why we did not pay more notice to such an absorbing subject? Our only excuse is: There is so little really known that it would be worse than useless to give long articles describing events that never occurred, or that were so highly coloured—that it was almost impossible to extract the truth from them. Weeks often elapse after a battle or a raid before the truth is arrived at, if ever. It would be unfair, however, to pass over the events of the past two weeks, during which the Southerners made a raid into Maryland, terrifying greatly the people of Washington and Baltimore. It is impossible to state how many of Lee's soldiers were engaged in it. The Northern people were completely taken by surprise, and before they had recovered themselves the damage was all done, and the Confederates had passed away again; and were it not for the dire consequences of their visit, the people of Washington might have thought it was only a terrible dream. They seem to have crossed somewhere in the neighborhood of Harper's Ferry and advanced boldly in the rear of Washington to the north east toward Baltimore. They spread themselves well over that fine country, first destroying the railways and telegraph lines, then commenced their more serious work. There numbers have been variously estimated from five to thirty thousand. We think that there were very likely something between the two. Be that as it may, they seem to have been handled with consummate skill. Separating into small bodies they ravaged the country in many miles; wherever battle was offered, as at Monocosey, they were instantly pretty successful, so much (so that one eye witness described them as rising from the earth,) and invariably victorious. They collected booty on all sides, sending it off the moment it was taken, and the possession of their captures is said to have been over 25 miles in length. Over 2,000 horses and 12,000 cattle and sheep are said to have been in one band. They burned houses and villages, and levied tribute to enormous amounts from the larger towns; there is no all they could well do was done, they disappeared, seemingly, we might say, into the ground—for the pursuing Northerners could no where find them if they sought them. There was a report that they had forged and destroyed the railway [illegible] Harper's Ferry, but [illegible] amount of booty [illegible] 4th inst. to [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE

TRENT DIVISION

GENTLEMEN:

An Election will take place in September or October next, when you will be called upon to choose a Member to represent the Trent Division.

Having been elected by your confidence in 1862 to fill up the unexpired time occasioned by the decease of the late Hon. E. Murney, and the resignation of the Hon. Sidney Smith, I have during the past year devoted as much of my time as it was possible for me to do in attending the two Sessions of Parliament, and also in attending to the requests of such of the constituents as have seen fit to honor me with their land and other matters, not immediately connected with Parliamentary duties.

We are about beginning a new era in the history of the politics of our country. The present move in the formation of a Ministry who pledge themselves to bury the feuds of the past, and to work together for the general good of the country, by bringing such measures before the next Session of Parliament as will tend to a final settlement of the sectional difficulties between Upper and Lower Canada, demands our serious consideration.

I may be permitted to state that I shall accord to them a fair trial, and whether in or out of Parliament, to assist by every means in my power the consummation of so desirable an object; trusting that Upper Canada may receive that which she is justly entitled to, and that both Provinces will be greatly benefitted by the change.

I have concluded from the numerous personal requests, as also by letters from many parts of the Division, to again place myself at the disposal of the Electors, and if again honored with your confidence, to discharge the trust committed to me in as satisfactory a manner as possible.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,
Yours &c. &c.,
BILLA FLINT.

Poetry.

THE BALLAD OF ROSS RAGSHAW.

BY EDWARD P. WHEELWRIGHT.

Ross Ragshaw was a cobbler
Once livin' at Ball's Head,
Wher' long he waxed stout and fat,
As well as his shoe-thread.

And while he showed not what he reaped
And ripped what he had sewed;
And almost apostolic saws
For way worn souls he showed.

The Boss a doctor never was,
Though often did he heal;
And kips and calfs he could cut up,
All for the public weal.

While he could neither write nor read,
The shoeless were aware
That for the rheumatiz in' he
Did exercise a care.

No evil fortune small or great,
Could make his spirits fall;
He even sang right merrily,
When once he lost his awl.

And even to his dyin' day,
Of Ragshaw he is told,
He never sold a leaky boot,
Though costs he ek half-soled.

The Boss a loyal tradesman was
What hated Rebel foe—
What frowned upon the "Copperheads,"
And scowled at copper coin.

Once he, from too much drink, was in
A state of lethargy,
When thieves made booty of his shoes,
And with them they did flee.

When he came to, says he, "Hi!
Got once upon their tracks,
For havin' stolen of my stock
They'll get shoemaker's whacks."

That afternoon one thief he caught,
What quickly came to grief;
For Boss he went from weltin' shoes
To whettin' of the thief.

The M. P.'s got another one
A-makin' out of town;
And when the thief was taken up,
He seemed quite taken down.

Boss plied his trade forty years,
[Or somewhere thereabout;]
For he though long a peggin' in,
Was longer peggin' out.

But Ragshaw couldn't always live;
Like cobblers in the past,
He one day from his last did go
To come unto his last.

A COOL PASSENGER.

Some years ago, before the secession war, business calling me to New Orleans, I found myself, one evening, steaming down the Mississippi.

The night was raw and unpleasant, and not having much to do, most of the passengers betook themselves to card playing. The boat being much crowded, all the tables, etc., were soon seized upon; and although everything available was pressed into the service, quite a number were obliged to wait until others had become tired.

One I observed, however, who seemed determined to find a place somewhere. Their attention was at length attracted to the plethoric form of apparently a Methodist clergyman, who extended up on several chairs, was peacefully slumbering. Quietly drawing up a stool on either side of him, they went to work. The game was single handed euchre, and as the points were scored with chalk upon the sleeper's back it soon presented a variegated appearance.

Notwithstanding the game was noisily conducted the old gentleman slept quietly on, until one of the players, becoming excited in some dispute which had arisen about the game, and forgetting the vitality of the card table, in adding emphasis to a proposition which he had laid down, brought down his clenched fist with considerable force immediately upon the pit of the old gentleman's stomach. A rambling cavernous sound followed, and the startled sleeper slowly assumed an upright position, violently struggling the while to recover the modicum of air so rudely expelled.

Almost choking with laughter I awaited the denouement of the scene. Slowly surveying first one player and then carefully scrutinizing his theologyphically adorned coat, he at length coolly said, much to our disappointment, as we were waiting for some violent outbreak, "Gentlemen, if you have got through with this coat, I have another under it that is perfectly at your disposal. Be so kind, however, as to be a little more careful with your gestures."

"George, my boy, do you know that Mr. Jones has found a beautiful baby on his doorstep, and is going to adopt him?" "Yes papa, he will be Mr. Jones' step-son, won't he?"

A man having accidentally broke a pane of glass in a window, was making the best of his way out of sight; but the proprietor stole a march upon him, and having seized him by the collar exclaimed, "You broke my window, fellow, did you not?" "To be sure I do," said Pat; "and didn't you see me runnin' home for the money to pay for it?"

A lady in Chicago the other day was asked by her cousin how she liked balmoral stockings. "Oh, very well," was the reply. "Well, I don't said the cousin, "nor will I wear them, either. I'll be hanged if I'll make a barber pole of my leg for the sake of being fashionable!"

The following stanza, on the marriage of Reuben Wise with Matilda Cheevis, is well told and witty—

At length she seized the proffered prize,
(A happy one beloved ma,)
For matrimony made her wise—
Before she was Miss Cheevis.

The man that laughs heartily is a doctor without diploma. His free does more good in a sick room than a bushel of powder or a gallon of bitter draughts. People are always glad to see him. Their hands instinctively go half-way out to meet his grasp, while they turn involuntarily from the clammy touch of the dyspepsia who speaks in the groaning key. He laughs you out of your faults, while you never dream of being offended with you; and you never know what a pleasant world you are living in until he points out the many streaks on its pathway.

Mr. "Jenkins" tells a very amusing anecdote of Eugine. According to him, the Empress is very jealous of late of the Countess of Castiglione, who has recently adopted a new mode of dressing her hair, by throwing it back loosely, and tying it behind with coloured ribbons, the ends hanging down in curls. Eugenie, having made diligent search, procured a little feminine shy terrier, with hair of much the same hue as her presumed rival in the Imperial affections, and after arranging it in a precisely similar fashion to that of the fair Countess, turned the animal loose in her husband's library!—thereby, it is suggested, called the lady in odious name by implication. The Emperor was indignant thereat, and a right royal row ensued in consequence.

PATENT WATER-DRAWER!

AT BLYTHE MILLS.

You must remember that by buying one of my Water-drawers, you get your water pure, which you cannot do by a suction Pump. I warrant them NOT TO FREEZE, and to stand as long, if not longer, than any Pump; and, besides, you save over fifty per cent. I can sell them cheaper than any Pump-maker in Canada! If anything goes astray by fair play within one year from the time of purchase, I bind myself to re-place it; so you cannot be deceived. Now, any one who is in need of a Pump would do well to get one of my Water-drawers at once. I have two teams out at all times to deliver them, and persons residing at a distance will receive prompt attention by sending a letter to the undersigned

Having on various occasions used your Liniment, I am happy to say that I have always found it beneficial. I have frequently used it for Bowel Complaint, and I have never known it to fail in effecting a cure. I think it the best medicine I ever used for Diarbo summer complaint, and disorders of a similar character I have also found it a never failing specific for Colds, and for affections of the head. I always recommend it to my friends, and would not be without it in the house for any consideration.

N. H. DOWN'S VEGETABLE BALSAMIC ELIXIR.

A CERTIFICATE

WORTH A MILLION.

An Old Physician's Testimony.

READ:

Waterbury, Vt., Nov. 24th, 1858.

Although I do not like the practice of Physicians recommending, indiscriminately, the patent medicines of the day; yet after a trial of ten years, I am free to admit that there is one medicine before the public that any Physician can use in his practice, and recommend to the public with perfect confidence; that medicine is Rev. N. H. Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

I have used it myself with the very best success, and now, whenever I am troubled with a Cough or Cold, I invariably use it. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are suffering from a Cold or a Cough, for the Croup, Whooping Cough, and all diseases tending to consumption, and to the Profession as a reliable article.

I am satisfied of its excellence beyond a doubt, having conversed personally with the Rev. N. H. Downs about it. He informed me of the principal ingredients of which the Elixir is composed, all of which are purely Vegetable and perfectly safe.

J. B. WOODWARD, M.D.

Now Brigade Surgeon U. S. Army.

This popular medicine is no longer an experiment. Thousands of people who have used it, bear witness to its superior excellence as a Liniment and a Pain-killer. Well directed accompanying each bottle. It may be used externally for

Rheumatism,
Neuralgia,
Tooth-ache,
Headache,
Burns,
Scalds,
Bruises & Swellings

&c., &c.

and may be used internally for

Cholic and Colds,
Cholera Morbus,
Bowel Complaints,
Diarrhœa,
Wind Cholic,
&c., &c.

Each might be said of its remedial properties and magical effects, but the limited space of this Advertisement will only admit of a general summary.

It is prepared with care; great pains being taken to allot an exact proportion of each of its ingredients, in such a manner that the combination shall be, in every respect, at once more rapid in its operation, and more effectual than any other similar medicine.

TANNER'S GERMAN OINTMENT!

Give Honor to whom Honor is due.

TANNER'S GERMAN OINTMENT is an article that has long been tested in South America and the United States, and is recommended by many Doctors in their practice for Diseases of the Eyes, Rheumatism, Sore Eyes, Skin Diseases, Colored Breast, &c. We will leave the public to judge by the numerous of the Virtues of this Ointment by whether the statements below from Gentlemen of high standing, person, on whose word on the richness may be placed.

(From a Missionary.)

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,

Your German Ointment I have used in my family for a good many years and consider it a very good article for Sore Eyes. I was afflicted so at one time that I was compelled to have my pulpit, but after using it by working it into my eyes for a short time, my eyes began to grow stronger and get better. I am now able to read print as fine off as any person.

Respectfully yours,
REV. HENRY W. REED.

Cold Water, Mich.,
Sept. 14, 1863.

REMARK.

If a person break his limb he does not expect to get cured by any Ointment; but for a family Ointment, this is superior to any now in the Market. Dr. Tanner, the inventor, was an old physician, has used this Ointment in his practice for over forty years. At the present time, there are millions of boxes sold every years, keeping a great many hands at the Industry employed to put it up. The Ointment does not contain any ingredient injurious to either man or beast.

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,

I was in the summer of 1862 afflicted with the rheumatism. I was compelled to use two crutch. I obtained Tanner's German Ointment as you directed. For about two weeks, when I began to get better. I am now able to walk without any canes and consider myself cured. I must heartily recommend your Ointment to the public as a good remedy for the Rheumatism.

Yours very truly,
Rev. GEORGE VESTPLATE.

Skaneateles, N. Y.,
July 21st, 1863.

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,

Your letter of 21st inst., is received, asking me if I were cured of the piles by the use of your Ointment. When you first recommended to me your German Ointment for the piles, I had little or no faith in it. I used it for two weeks. I can now perfectly well. I was so bad at that time, I was compelled to keep my bed. I have no hesitancy in giving you my letter for publication as I think every body afflicted ought to try it.

Very respectfully,
Rev. ENOS COON.

Branch County, Michigan,
October 3rd, 1863.

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,

I have used your German Ointment for sick headache and think it the best remedy I can use.

Respectfully yours,
Rev. GEORGE WHEAT.

Canaan, N. Y.
Nov. 12th, 1863.

Dr. TANNER,
Dear Sir,

I have used your German Ointment for chilblains, and I think it the best remedy in use for that complaint.

Yours truly, etc.,
HENRY C. COON.

Why is it that Doctors discourage the use of many good medicines sold at the drug stores? Simply because it hurts their business and nothing else. If a man is ill and is ill and is cured by a few doses of Ayer's Pills, the doctor is not profited in any way. The almighty dollar causes many doct

SLEEP.

"God bless the man that first invented sleep!"
So Sancho Panza said, and so say I;
And bless him, also, that he didn't keep
His great discovery to himself; or try
To make it—as the lucky fellow might—
A close monopoly by "patent right."

Yes, bless the man who first invented sleep,
(I really can't avoid the iteration;)
But curse the man, with nerves of steel and deep
Whate'er the rascal's name, or age, or station,
Who lies awake, and went round advising,
That artificial cut-off—early rising!

"Rise with the lark, and with the lark to bed,"
Observes some solemn, sentimental owl;
Maxims like these are very cheaply said;
But ere you make yourself a fool or fowl,
Pray just inquire about their time—and find—
And whether larks have any bed at all!

The "time for honest folks to be abed"
Is in the morning, if I reason right;
And he who cannot keep his precious head
Upon his pillow till its morning light,
And so enjoy his forty morning winks,
Is up—to knavery; or else—to drinks!

Thompson, who sung about the "Seasons," said
It was a glorious thing to rise in season;
But then he said it lying in his bed
At ten o'clock, A. M.—the very reason
He wrote so charmingly. The simple fact is,
His preaching wasn't sanctioned by his practice.

'Tis doubtless, well to be sometimes awake—
Awake to duty and awake to truth—
But when, and a nice review we take
Of our best deeds and days, we find in sooth,
The hours that leave the slightest cause to weep
Are those we passed in childhood, or—asleep!

'Tis beautiful to leave the world awhile
For the soft visions of the gentle night,
And free at last from mortal care and guile,
To live, as only in the sunless sight,
In sleep's sweet realms, so easily shut in,
Where, at the worst, we only dream of sin.

So let us sleep and give the Maker praise.
I like the lad who, when his father sought,
To clip his morning nap by hackneyed phrase
Of vagrant worm by early songster caught,
Cried "inverted bird right! It's not at all surprising
The worm was punished, sir, for early rising!"

Literature.

THE PROSE OF BATTLES.

"I would like to see a battle," said a student to me the other day, "for, through the whole literature of war, I look in vain for a minute description of any action."

We may trace this deficiency to the disparity between the writers and the readers of war literature. Those who witness and record are military men, either by profession or education; their accounts lack circumstantiality, and often simplicity. They assume that the reader has certain elementary knowledge of terms and movements, and their narratives seem, therefore, vague, general and unsatisfactory. It will not avail Mr. Coke of Northumberland that the "fourth division outflanked the enemy," for Mr. Coke, having passed much of his life underground, never beheld even a militia training. A division, to his mind, may include twenty men or twenty thousand men, and to outflank may intimate to ambush or to run away. Mr. Philog, the schoolmaster, reads in the newspaper that a certain regiment marched up in double quick, or threw itself into a hollow square, or formed a pyramid to repulse cavalry, or rallied by fours, or deployed as skirmishers, or charged bayonets. But Mr. Philog, though an intelligent person, would like to be told, in detail, how the regiment deployed, and how the pyramid appeared. He has been to but one funeral in the course of his life, and never saw a murder or a hanging. He wishes, in common with the wehmen whom he birches, to know more of the real and horrible—how a man falls out of the ranks, what lines harden into his dead face, how he lies among the tangled wretchedness on the battle-field, how and by whom he is buried. In fact, he wishes daguerreotypes of war. When the powder has flashed out of the sky, and the tableau have fallen away, tell him how the strewn plains would have looked to him had he been there—give him, in a word, the "prose of battles."

The writer has followed some of the Bloodiest campaigns in the American civil war in a civil capacity; he has witnessed the incidents of charge, retreat, captivity, and massacre through the eyes of a novice, and some of his reminiscences may not be uninteresting to the less experienced.

The "first death" which I recall among my most vivid remembrances happened on the Chickahominy River, during M'Clellans famous peninsula campaign. The Federal army lay along the high hills on the north side of the stream, and the Confederates upon the hills of the other side. The pickets of the latter reached almost to the brink, and the Federals were busily engaged in erecting bridges at various points. I was standing at New Bridge one day, watching the operations of the soldiery, when General Z. rode down through the meadows to examine the work. A guard held the Richmond bank of the creek, access being obtained to them by a series of rafts or buoys; but the guard could go only a little way from the margin, for some sharpshooters lay behind a knoll, and had, up to this time, morally wounded every adventurer. The general reined his horse on the safe side of the river, and called briefly "Major!"

A young flaxen-haired, florid man, with a gold leaf to his shoulder-bar, stepped out, saluted, and paid respectful attention.

"General!"

"Is that your picket!"—pointing to the group on the opposite bank.

"Yes, general."

"No more men beyond the knoll and bush!"

"No, general; it is dangerous. The enemy is there in force."

"Do you know their force!"

"No general."

"Call one of your men."

"Parks!"

A little bullet-headed fellow, whose legs were unduly to the thigs, and who was driving a round log to its place in the roadway, dropped his mallet at once, swung around, as if on a pivot, and saluted.

"Go cautiously up the bank," said the general—"you see it there; draw fire, if you can; but if there be no response, you will shout to provoke it."

I saw the rout in the soldiers thrust rise slowly, as if propelled by his heart; a little quiver came to his lips, and he looked half inquiring to his major. In a moment he recovered, tapped his cap lightly, and leaped from hoop to hoop, reached the guard-post, ran up the hill, passed the knoll, and stood with his head and shoulders in full view, but his extremities and trunk behind the ridge. We all watched solicitously, and in dead silence.

"Shout! my man" cried the general—"shout!"

The hands of the soldier went up; he swung his cap, and called shrilly: "Hurrah for General M'Clellan and the U!"——

A volley of rea-livery blazed from the timber beyond, and the men flung up their arms and disappeared. With a yell of revenge, the guard broke from the margin, discharged their muskets into the ambuscade, and directly returned, bearing the little fellow with the bullet-head; but the mud on his trousers was turned red, and blood dripped in a rill from his mouth and chin. The young major's florid face grew pale, he shut his lips tightly; and the soldiers, a little apart, swore through their teeth.

"I am sorry he got his bullet," said the general; "but he died fulfilling orders, and he was a brave man."

I wondered, as he rode away, attended by his dashing staff, if any more brave men had died, or were to die fulfilling such orders.

A dreadful opportunity occurred, after the battle of Hanover Court House, to look upon wholesale massacre. The wounded of both sides had been tucked from the distant field to the encampments of the army, and were quartered in and around some old Virginian dwellings. All the cowhouses, wagon-sheds, hay-barracks, hen coops, and pig-sties, and barns had been turned into hospitals. The floors were littered with corn-shucks and fodder, and the maimed, gashed, and dying lay confusedly together.

A few, slightly wounded, related incidents of the battle through the windows; but sentries stood in the door with crossed muskets, to keep out idlers and gossips. The mention of my vocation was an open sesame and I went unrestrained into all the larger hospitals. In the first of these, an amputation was being performed, and at the door lay a little heap of human limbs. I shall not soon forget the bare-armed surgeons, with bloody instruments, who leaned over the rigid and insensible figure, while the comrades of the subject looked on horror-struck at the scene. The grating of the murderous saw drove me into the open air, but in the second hospital which I visited, a wounded man had just expired, and I encountered his body at the threshold. The lanterns hanging around the room within streamed fitfully upon the red eyes and half naked figures. All were looking up, and saying in pleading monotone: "Is that you, doctor?" Men, with their arms in slings, went restlessly up and down, smarting with fever. Those who were wounded in the lower extremities, body, or head, lay upon their backs, tossing even in sleep. They listened peevishly to the wind whistling through the links of the barn; they followed one with their rolling eyes; they turned away from the lantern glare, which seemed to scar them. Soldiers sat by the severely wounded, laving their sores with water. In many wounds, the ball still remained, and the flesh was swollen and discoloured. There were some who had been shot in the bowels, and now and then these poor fellows were frightfully convulsed, breaking out into shrieks and shouts. Some of them iterated a single word, as "Doctor!" "Help!" or "God!" or "Oh!" commencing with a loud, spasmodic cry and continuing the same word till it died away in sighs. The act of eating seemed to lull the pain. Many were unconscious, or lethargic, moving their fingers and lips mechanically, but never more to open their eyes upon the light; they were already going through the valley of the shadow. I think still, with a shudder, of the faces of those who were told mercifully that they could not live—the unutterable agony; the plea for somebody on whom to call; the lunging eye that poured out prayers; the looking on mortal as if its resources were infinite; the fearful looking to the immortal, as if it were so far off, so implacable, that the dying appeal would be in vain; the open lips through which one could almost look at the quaking heart below; the gnashings of brow and tangled hair; the closing pangs, the awful rest at last. I thought of Parthasius in the poem, as I looked at these things:

Gods!
Could I but paint a dying groan,

and how the keen eye of West would have turned from the rocking cockpit of the Victory, or the tomb of the dead man restored, to this old barn peopled with horrors. I rambled in and out, learning to look at death, studying the manifestations of pain, quivering and sickening at times, but plying my vocation, and jotting names for my column of mortalities.

At eleven o'clock there was music along the high-road, and a general rushing out of camp ensued. The victorious regiments were returning from Hanover, under escort, and all the banks were pealing national airs. As they turned down the fields towards their old encampments, several brigades stood under arms to welcome them. But the solemn ambulances still followed after, and the red flag of the hospitals still flounced bloodily in the blue midnight.

Between midnight and morning, the wounded were removed to White House, on the river Pamunkey, whence they were forwarded by steamers to northern cities. I rode down with my despatches in an ambulance that contained six wounded men besides. Ambulances, it may be said incidentally, are either two-wheeled or four-wheeled. Two-wheeled ambulances are comically called "hop, step, and jump." They are so constructed that the footpartitions either very high or very low, and may be both at intervals. The wounded occupants may thus be compelled to ride for hours with their heads elevated far beyond where their heels, and may fearfully be shaken out, or into them bones broken by the terrible jolting. The four-wheeled ambulances are built in shelves or compartments, but the wounded are in danger of suffocation in them. If one is one of the latter that I rode, sitting with the driver. We had four horses, but were thrice "changed" on the road, the mud close to their old sweat wounded now till we could start the wheels. Two of these were wounded in the face, one of them having an ear severed; and the other having a fragment of his jaw knocked out. A third had received a ball among the thews and muscles behind his knee, and his whole body appeared to be paralyzed. Two were wounded in the shoulders, and the sixth was shot in the breast. The last was believed to be injured internally, as he spat blood, and suffered almost the pangs of death. The ride with these men, over twenty miles of hilly, woody country, was like Dante's ascension into the Stundenin the awful stillness of the dark pines, their screams frightened the hooting owls, and put to silence the whistling insects in the leaves and tree-tops. They heard the gurgle of the rills, and called aloud for water to quench their thirst. One of them sang a shrill, fierce, fleshish ballad, in an interval of relief, but plunged, on a sudden relapse, into prayers and curses. We heard them groaning to themselves as we sat in front, and one man, it seemed, was quite out of his mind. These were the outward manifestations; but what regrets for good resolves unfulfilled, and remorses for years mis-spent, made hideous those sore and panting hearts? The moonlight pierced through the thick foliage of the wood, and streamed into our faces, like invitations to a better life. But the crippled and bleeding could not see or feel it, buried in the shelves of the ambulance.

During the heat of action at Gaines' Mill I crossed Grape Vine Bridge, and remarked incidents scarcely less terrible. At every step of my progress I met wounded persons. A horseman rode past me, leaning over the pommel of his saddle, with blood streaming from his mouth, and hanging in gouts from his saturated beard. The dip had been intensely hot, and black bugs were besetting the wounded with cool lemonade. It was a common occurrence for the couples that carried the wounded in "stretchers" to stop on the way, purchase a glass of beverage, and drink it with gory hands. Sometimes the blankets on the stretchers were visibly folded, and then I knew that the man was dead. A little fellow who used his sword for a cane stopped me on the road and said: "See yer! This is the ball that just fell out o' my leg."

He handed me a lump of lead as big as my thumb, and pointed to a rent in his pantaloons, whence the drops rolled down his boots.

"I wouldn't part with that for suthin' handsome," he said; "it'll be nice to wear him."

As I cantered away he shouted after me: "Be sure you spell my name right! It's Smith with an e—S-m-e-i-t-h-e."

In one place I met five drunken men escorting a wounded sergeant. This man was shot in the jaw, and when he attempted to speak, the blood choked his gesticulation."

"You le' go, pardner!" said one of the staggering brutes—"he's not your sergeant. Go 'way!"

"Now, sergeant!" said the other idiotically; I'll see you all right, sergeant! Come, Bill! fetch him over to the corn-crib, and we'll give him a drink."

Here the first speaker struck the second and the sergeant in wrath knocked them both down. At the time the enemy's cannon were booming close at hand.

I came to an officer of rank, whose shoulder-emblem I could not distinguish, riding upon a limping field-horse. Four men held him to his seat, and a fifth led the animal. The officer was evidently wounded, though he did not seem to be bleeding, and the dust of the battle had settled upon his blanched, stiffening face like grave-mould upon a corpse. He was swaying in the saddle, and his hair—for he was bare-headed—shook across his white eyeballs. He reminded me of the famous Cid, whose body was sent forth to scare the Saracens. A mile or more from Grape Vine Bridge, on a hill-top, lay a frame farmhouse, with cherry trees encircling it, and along the declivity were some cabins and corn-bins. The house was now a surgeons' head-quarters, and the wounded lay in the yard and lane, under the shade, waiting their turns to be hacked and maimed. Some curious people were peeping through the windows at the operations. As processions of freshly wounded went by, the poor fellows, lying on their backs looked mutely at me, and their great eyes smote my heart.

After the carnage of Fairoaks, I visited the field, and by the courtesy of the Irish Americus, General Meagher, was shewn the relics of the battle. This engagement, it will be remembered, occurred in what was called the Chickahominy Swamp, and it was fought, mainly, in some thickets and fields, along the York River Railway. I visited first a cottage and some outlying barns beside the track. The house was occupied by some thirty wounded Federals; they lay in their blankets on their back upon the floors—pale, helpless, hollow-eyed—making low moans at every breath. Two or three were feverishly sleeping, and on the flies revelled upon their gashes, they stirred uneasily and moved their hands to and fro. By the flatness of the covering over the extremities, I could see that several had only stumps of legs. They had lost the sweet enjoyment of walking afield, and were but fragments of men, to limp forever through a painful life. Such wrecks of power I never beheld. Broad-brawny, buoyant, a few hours ago, the nervous shock and the loss of blood attendant upon amputation had well-nigh drained them to the last drop. These faces were as white as the tidy ceiling; they were whining like babies; and only their rolling eyes distinguished them from mutilated corpses. Some seemed quite broken in spirits; and one who could speak, observing my pitiful glances toward his severed thighs threw up his mouth, and chin, and wept, as if, with the loss of manhood, all his sentiment were frustrated. A few attendants were bustling off the hourly supply of water, filling their cans, or administering cooling draughts. The general story of the dead they were thrown heavily by the wounded; but in a corner sheltered from the scorching sun, half unconsciously half delightedly, I thought with a shudder of sunbrowned men surrounded, and how, in the future, his first recollections of existence should be of booming guns and dying soldiers.

The cow-shed contained seven corpses, scarcely yet cold, lying upon their backs at a row, and first losing the pale absence to mine. The farthest removed reminded to be a diminutive boy; and I thought if he had a mother that she might sometime like to speak to me. Beyond my record of the names of these, falsely spelled, perhaps, they would have no history. And people call such deaths glorious! Upon a pile of lumber and some heaps of fence-rails close by, sat some dozen of wounded men, mainly Federals, with bandaged arms and faces and torn clothing. There was one shot in the foot, who howled at every effort to remove his boot; the blood issued from a rent in the side, and at last the frantic man cut, piecemeal from the flesh. They ate voraciously, though in pain and fear, for a little soup and meat were being doled out to them.

The most touching of all the scenes was presented at the stable or barn on the premises, where a bare, dingy floor—the planks of which tilted and shook as one made his way over them—was strewn with suffering people. Just at the entrance sat a boy, totally blind, both eyes having been torn out by a Minie ball. He crouched against the gable in darkness and agony, tremulously fingering his knees. Near at hand sat another, who had been shot through the middle of the forehead, but, singular to relate, is still living, though insane, and evidently beyond hope. Death had drawn blue and yellow circles beneath his eyes, and he muttered incomprehensibly, wagging his head. Two men, perfectly naked, lay in the middle of the place, wounded in the bowels and loins; and at a niche in the weather-boarding, where some pale light peeped in, four mutilated wretches were gasping for a cordial.

I was now half a little way down the railway to see the Confederates. The rain began to fall at this time, and the poor fellows shut their eyes, to avoid the pelting of the drops. There was no shelter for them within a mile, and the mud absolutely reached half-way up their bodies. Nearly one-third suffered amputation above the knee. There were about thirty at this spot; but owing to the destruction of the Chickahominy bridges, by reason of a freshet, they could not at present be removed to White House. Some of them were fine athletic, vigorous fellows, and my attention was called to one who had been married only three days before.

"Doctor," said one feebly, "I feel very cold. Do you think that this is death? It seems to be creeping to my heart. I have no feeling in my feet, and my thighs are benumbed."

A Federal soldier came along with a bucket of soup, and fills the canteens and plates. He appeared to be a relative of Mark Tapley, and possessed much of that estimable person's jollity.

"Come, pardner!" he said, "drink yer sup. Now, old boy, this 'ill warm ye; sock it down, and you'll see yer sweetheart soon. You dead, Alleybaimy? Go 'way now! You'll fire a hundred years—you will; that's wot you'll do. Won't he lad? What! Not any? Get out! You'll be slap on your legs next week, and hev another shot at 'em the week after that. You with the butternut trousers; Say! Wake up, and take some o' this. Halloo-lad! pardner wake up. He stirred him gently with his foot; he bent down to touch his face—a grimness came over his merryment; the man was still and dumb.

General Baker, commanding the 88th New York, a tall martial, Irish man, took me into the woods where some of the slain still remained. We had proceeded but a very little way when we came to a trodden place beneath the pines, where a scalp lay in the leaves, and the imprint of a body was plainly visible. The bayonet scabbard lay at one side, the canteen at the other. We saw no corpses, however, as fatigue-parties had been interring the slain, and the wood was dotted with heaps of clay, where the dead slept below in the sorry trenches. Quantities of cartridges were scattered here and there, dropped by the retreating Confederates. Some of the cartridge-pouches that I examined were completely filled, showing that the possessors had not fired a single round; others had but one cartridge missing. There were fragments of clothing, hair, blankets, murderous bowie and dirk knives, spurs, caps, flasks, and plumes, dropped in the way through the thickets, and the trees on every hand were pitched with balls. I come upon a [illegible] shot during the fight: not only those who make the war must feel the war! At one of the mounds the burying-party had just completed their work, and the men were throwing the last clods upon the remains. They had dug pits of not more than two feet in depth, and dragged the bodies heedlessly to the edges, whence they were toppled down, and scantily covered. Much of the interrings had been done by night, and the flare of lanterns upon the discoloured faces and dead eyes must have been hideously effective. The grave-diggers, however, were practical personages, and had probably little care-fed dramatic effects. They leaned upon their spades when the rites were finished, and a large repulsive looking person, who appeared to be principal upon all occasions, said grimmingly: "Colonel, your honour, them boys 'ill never stand forninst the Irish brigade again. If they'd but known it was us, mr. begorra! they'd ha' brought coffins and 'em."

"No, sirree!" "They got their ticket for same!" "We hitched them fish, will enough!" shouted the other spasm-diggers.

"Do you believe, colonel," said the first speaker, again, "that them rebels 'ill have us a go-soup to watch them? Be me sowl! I'm just aching to warm me hands wid rifle-practice!"

The approach of death seemed to have added zest and gusto to these people; having ceased themselves to fear it, and I submit, naively? heedlessly, if a return to civil life would find them less ferocious.

The memorable retreat from the Chickahominy to the James, whereby McClellan saved the relics of his disbanded and beaten army, was a series of horrors, which the limits of this article will not allow me to recapitulate. A sketch of the opening of the battle of White Oak will answer for the present. "On the night of the 29th of June, 1862, I came to sleep on the brink of one of the little fleeting the nearly bank of White Oak Creek. The Federal army had opened over during the night, and the bridges and causeways through the swamp had been destroyed behind them. A crash and a stunning shock, as of a falling sphere, aroused me at nine o'clock—a shell had burst in front of my tent, and the Confederate artillery was thundering from Casey's old hill beyond the swamp. As I lay by the camp-fire, [illegible] I had not otherwise understood, I had opportunity to remark one of those commonplace but points which decompose Among civilian soldiers.

The camps were plunged into disorder. As the shells dropped here and there among the tents and teams, the wildest and most fearful deeds were enacted. Here, a concussion blew up, tearing the horses to pieces, and whirling a caisson-car among the clouds; there, an ammunition-waggon exploded, and the air seemed to be filled with fragments of wood, iron, and flesh. A boy about at one of the fires cooking his matted hair; suddenly, his head blew off, spattering his brains and the shell, which I could not see, exploded in a piece of wood, and tearing the trees. The effect upon the people around me was instantaneous and appalling. Some that were partially dressed took to their heels bugging a medley of clothing. The teamsters climbed into the saddles, and shouted to their nags, whipping them the while. If the heavy wheels hesitated to revolve, they left horses and vehicles, to their fates, taking themselves to the woods, or, in some cases, cut traces and harness, galloping away like madmen. In a twinkling, our camps were almost deserted, and the tents, wood and road "swarming with fugitives, pushing, swearing, falling and trampling, while the forces below fell momentarily among them making havoc at every rod.

To join the flying, after mine, was my first impulse; but, after-thought reminded me that it would be better to remain. I must not leave my horse, for I could not walk the whole long way to the James, and the swamp-fever had so reduced me, that I hardly cared to keep a little life going. I almost marvelled at my coolness, since, in the fulness of strength and health, I might have been one of the first of the fugitives; whereas, I now looked interestedly upon the excited spectacle, and wished that it could be daguerreotyped. Before our artillery could be brought to play, the enemy, emboldened at his success, pushed a column of infantry down the hill, to cross the creek, and engaged us on our capping-ground. For a time, I believed that he would be successful; and in that event, confusion and ruin would have overtaken the Unionists. The grey and butter-nut lines appeared over the brow of the hill; they poured a volley into our camps when half-way down, and, under cover of the smoke, they dashed forward impetuously with a loud buzza. The artillery beyond them kept up a steady fire, raining shell, grape, and canister over their heads, and ploughing the ground on our side into zigzag furrows, rending the tents, shattering the ambulances, tearing the tents to tatters, slaying the horses, butchering the men. Directly, a captain named Mott brought his battery to bear, but before he could open fire, a solid shot struck one of his twelve-pounders, breaking the trunnion and splintering the wheels. In like manner, one of his cannon blew up, and I do not think that he was able to make any practice whatever. A division of the infantry was now marched forward to engage the Confederates at the creek-side, but two of the regiments turned bodily, and could not be rallied.

The moment was full of significance and [illegible] behold these failures with breathless suspense. In five minutes the pursuers would gain the creek and in ten drive our demoralized battalions [illegible]

I hurried to my horse [illegible] I might be ready to escape; the shell and ball still made music around me; I buckled up my saddle with tremulous fingers, and put my foot upon the stirrup. But a cheer recalled me and a great clapping of hands, as at a clever performance in the amphitheater, I looked again. A battery had opened from our position across the road upon the Confederate infantry, as they reached the very brink of the swamp. For a moment, the bayonets teased wildly, the dense column staggered like a drunken man, the flags rose and fell, and then the line moved back disorderly; the gaps had been defended.—Chamber's Journal.

THE LAST FRENCH JOKE.—The last joke at the expense of the French Emperor for the protection of animals is to the following effect:—A countryman armed with an immense club presents himself before the president of the society and claims the first prize. He asked to describe the act of humanity on which he founds his claims.—"I saved the life of a wolf," replied the countryman. "I might have killed him with the bludgeon; and he swings the weapon in the air, to the intense amusement of the president. "But where was this wolf?" enquired the latter. "what had he done to you?" "He had just devoured my wife," is the reply. The President reflects an instant, and then says—"My friend I am of opinion that you have been sufficiently rewarded."

THURSDAY, AUGUST 4, 1864.

DEATH OF MR. CONGER.

Part of our last issue contained the painful announcement of the decease of WILLIAM S. CONGER, Esq., M. P. P., for Peterborough; it took place on Wednesday evening 27th ult., at half-past Seven o'clock. Mr. CONGER had been ill for a very long period—over a year and a-half—so much so that he was very seldom in his place in the House during last Session. On his return from Quebec, at the close of last Session, we had a call from him, when he stated that he was fast getting better, and that his medical attendant gave him every encouragement to hope for a speedy recovery. We believe that for a lengthened period his friends have foreseen that he was not likely to get well, and that his contemplated trip to Europe was never likely to be made. Had Mr. CONGER devoted less time to his public duties, and earlier taken the contemplated trip, the event might have been different.

Though differing much from Mr. CONGER in our public policy, we would be wanting in candour did we not state that we believe him to have been thoroughly honest in his convictions. We were never disappointed in the votes he gave in the House—they were all dictated by a thorough trust in the honesty of his political leaders, and the firm belief that they were for the best. To the back country he was a firm friend—continually trying some means for its development and improvement; we believe that in and out of session he did all in his power for the advancement of its prosperity. The Trent Valley Canal, too, was a pet scheme of his; and in an interview we had with him last winter he stated his belief that the day was not far distant when its importance would not only be acknowledged but acted upon. He had a firm belief that it would soon be a fact accomplished. We believe his last important labor in Parliament was to finish the report of the Committee he had got to examine into the merits of the scheme. Mr. CONGER was well known for many years in Cobourg as an ultra-Reformer—a friend and partisan of the Upper Canada party of that day. In 1835 he contested the Newcastle District in their interest, but unsuccessfully—the Family Compact was too strong for him. During the rebellion in 1837 he was on the side of order and good government; he is said to have equipped and organized a company of volunteers mainly at his own expense. In 1842 he was appointed Sheriff of the United Counties of Peterborough and Victoria. This office he held till 1856, when, on the retirement of Mr. LARKIN from the representation of the County, he determined to enter Parliament, and gave up the Shrievalty for that purpose. It is a pity, we have heard hundreds of times, he ever took this step, as he was universally liked as Sheriff, and during his continuance in that office—a period of over 14 years—gave universal satisfaction in conducting the difficult and always delicate duties of that office. He contested the County of Peterborough against F. FRENCHOZ, Esq., and was elected by a large majority. From that time till his death he was a firm supporter of JOHN A. MACDONALD and the Conservative party. In 1857-8, he was defeated by THOS. SHORT, Esq., many of his former supporters being disappointed with his votes in the House. From his early antecedents they had expected better things of him, and on his appearance for re-election shewed their disapproval of his conduct by rejecting him. In 1861 he contested the County once more with COL. HAULTAIN, but was unsuccessful. But in 1863 he was returned by acclamation, COL. HAULTAIN having determined at the very last moment not again to contest the County. The Reform party were unfortunately left in a rather awkward position; and to use an expression of one them who has generally been pretty prompt at elections: "Out of two evils they chose the least." Mr. CONGER continued to represent the County till his death. His funeral took place on Friday afternoon. He was followed to his grave by a very large number of all political creeds, among whom, perhaps, there was not one who did not feel a respectful regret for Mr. CONGER'S loss. Mr. CONGER was, in his lifetime, a member of the Masonic Craft, and was attended to his narrow home by a procession of his brethren. They preceded the hearse on foot to the Little Lake Cemetery, where, after the services of the Church of England (of which Mr. CONGER was, in later years, a member) had been read, the Masons read their service, and dropped into his grave branches of the evergreen fir, emblems of immortality.

We offer to his bereaved widow our best sympathies, and can assure her we have heard only one expression among all Mr. CONGER'S old acquaintances, viz.: that of intense sympathy for her who has lost so much.

THE COUNTY VACANT.

The electors of this county will soon be called upon to fill up the vacancy caused by the demise of Mr. Conger. Party lines are said to be obliterated now. And all men aspiring to the vacant seat in the Legislature will advocate the same policy. Whoever may aspire to represent the county of Peterborough must profess Upper Canadian sentiments, and if reformers are their own friends they will look well to the antecedents of the man they send to the house. It is almost impossible to tell in what guise parties may be next session, and no pledges will be useful to bind a man. But if due care be taken to select a man whose antecedents are known, whose conduct is above suspicion, then reliance may be placed in him—and no doubt entertained that whatever may be the state of parties, he will at least represent our interests in a faithful and honest manner. Too much care cannot be exercised to select an honest faithful reformer, there will be many questions to deal with in the house than that of our sectional difficulties, although party lines are now obliterated and party feeling should now be forgotten.

It will be our duty, keeping in view these facts, to be extremely guarded in the selection of our representative. Whatever may may have been his creed in former times there must be no doubt now about his views in respect to the great question of the day. The settlement of our constitutional difficulty upon a proper basis is the first important matter for our consideration at the present moment, and all other considerations should be laid aside. The acknowledgement of the [illegible] The past [illegible] ment, all who [illegible] for the present [illegible] to the future are [illegible] Upper Canada [illegible] some plan whereby the institutions and laws of the Lower Canadians may be conserved and yet the just rights of Upper Canada not trampled under foot, by which all the members of the Canadian Family, of whatever origin or creed, may become one in heart as they are one in interest, that he may choose a man from among us who will yield them an honest and consistent support; and who—if it were possible that transitory were urged—if it were possible that these men who have in so solemn and public a manner pledged themselves to aid us in securing our just rights, should instead playing us false—would faithfully guard our interests and do all in his power to bring punishment on the heads of those who had so trifled with our holiest aspirations. Let us be watchful, too, to select a man who will see the finances of the country carefully managed in future. True, there is less to be apprehended on this score than formerly, since it will be illegal for the Government in all time coming to spend the public money before the people have voted it; but even then there are many men of extravagant habits who are such by nature to have any say in the disbursement of the public funds, such men should be rejected at the polls.

We hope that the present movement, so fraught with consequences of the most eventful nature to the people of our County, will not fail through want of support—the hearty support of all reformers—and we appeal to men of all creeds, who wish well to our common country, to unite in sending to the aid of the Government a man who will firmly contend for such legislation as will at once and for ever remove all hardness of feeling between the two Provinces.

The electors have never in the history of the County had so important an issue submitted to them as the present. Agreed, as we hope they are to a man as to the necessity of some measure being taken to settle the continually recurring jars between the Upper and the Lower Provinces, they ought carefully to select their representative and not attempt to divest themselves of the responsibility if the attempt at reconciliation fails, for assuredly on the temper of the present house depends the future of Canada, whether for good or for evil.

THE VACANCY TO BE FILLED.

Since writing the above, we learn that Colonel Haultain has determined to offer himself a candidate for the vacant seat in the Legislature.

He was urged to this step by many of the principal men of the county of both parties. And, perhaps, his consent to serve in the house may do more to unite parties in the the county than the bringing out of a more purely party man would have done.

It is not at all likely that there will be any contest, both parties having apparently agreed to support the Colonel. If any opposition were offered now it could only be personal not political. All men are apparently agreed at the present time to support one grand policy, and no man would have any chance in this county who was not an out and out supporter of that policy which has for its object the just rights of Upper Canada. The political issue being thus laid aside, there only remains the personal one. We do not apprehend much difficulty on this score.

The Colonel is well known, his history since he came among us is patent to every one. His votes during the time he represented us have had the approval of almost every one. In his address, he says, that the present movement for the adjustment of existing difficulties has his hearty approval and will have his cordial support. That he will do his best to place the military defences of the province on a proper footing, so that it may be as efficient as possible without being too burdensome to the people. That the proper management of the Finances will receive his best attention, and that he will do all in his power for the settlement of our Crown Lands on which the prosperity of the country so much depends. We hope he will have the cordial support of all the electors of the county, and that the unanimity which has marked the call for Col. Haultain, to become candidate will prevail so generally that he may be elected without a contest.

LAKEFIELD BAZAAR.

IN AID OF THE CHURCH BUILDING FUND.

It has been arranged that the Bazaar in aid of the fund now being raised for the purpose of building a new English Episcopal Church at Lakefield, shall be held in the Village on Wednesday the 31st day of the current month, commencing at 11 o'clock, A. M. Should the above-named day be wet, the Bazaar will be opened on the first fine day subsequently.

In addition to the work, useful and ornamental, that will be offered for sale, refreshments will be provided at a moderate charge—and every endeavour will be made to render the day a gala one of no ordinary attraction.

The following ladies comprise the Committee,—by any of whom, contributions, whether towards the embellishment of the tables or in behalf of the refreshment department, will be gratefully received:—Mrs. Strickland, Mrs. Clementi, Mrs. Traill, Mrs. Leigh, Mrs. Beatty, Mrs. James Allen, Mrs. Percy Strickland, Mrs. Lillicrap, and Mrs. Anyes.

THE STAMP TAX.

In another column we give the main clauses of the new stamp act. Stamps are for sale at the post office, parties requiring them can be furnished by applying to Mr. Carver.

EXCURSION OF THE PRESS ASSOCIATION.—The Annual Excursion of the Canadian Press Association, will take place this season on Thursday, the 18th of August. The members of the craft will meet at Toronto on the morning of that day, and proceed by the Northern railway to Bell Ewart, on Lake Simcoe, where the party will embark on board the steamer "Emily May," and make the circuit of the lake. With their usual liberality the Managers of the Grand Trunk and Northern Railways and the proprietors of the Lake Simcoe steamer, have issued free passes for the occasion.

THE AMERICAN WAR.

Chapin's Bluff, on the James River, was the scene of a fierce engagement on the 28th ult. The Federals were repulsed with heavy loss. Their loss in killed, wounded and prisoners is estimated at 5,000. The Confederate loss is said to be 1,000.

Gen. Early has crossed the Potomac, and is marching on Washington. He has defeated Gen. Wallace, and driven him from Monocacy Junction. Gen. Wallace's force is said to have been 10,000 strong. Gen. Early has also defeated Gen. Lew

COUNTY OF PETERBOROUGH.

Gentlemen,

The Reformed deputies of the Late representative of this County again calls upon you to exercise the privilege of electing another to represent you under Legislative Assembly of the Province.

I have been requested by many to offer myself as a candidate at the forthcoming election, and these circumstances which have induced me to place my services at your disposal during the present Parliament.

The various issues presented by our holding public men, and the consideration of the political position of the Province, call for a measure of particular attention, urge to cordial co-operation, and would render improper, private remarks or complaints as to their past respectful conduct or character.

I apprehend that any man at present offering himself for the suffrages of the electors, has chiefly to confine himself to the expression of his opinions relative to the political considerations intended into with a view to certain constitutional changes.

Were this consideration formed under ordinary circumstances, or for ordinary purposes, the policy, that expediency of it might justly be called in question; but, considering that it was formed under circumstances fraught with danger to the United Province, and for the special object of remedying existing difficulties, it merits our highest approbation—and, I believe, must tend to raise in the public estimation the character of all concerned in it.

It has my entire approval; and should the forthcoming election result favorably to myself, I am prepared to give the present Administration my cordial support in carrying out the important objects for which it has been formed.

That we need a prospect is before us of being able, peaceably, to settle difficulties of no ordinary character, is matter for devout thankfulness; especially when we regard the disturbed condition of the world generally, and of this Continent, in particular; and it should be the prayer of every one who recognizes an over-ruling Providence in the affairs of men and nations, that God's blessing may be vouchsafed, in order to perfect that which has been so well begun—and permanently to establish peace and justice in this portion of the dominions of Her Majesty, our Gracious Sovereign.

There are three matters of general and abiding importance that will exist and call for special notice, whatever may be the issue of present arrangements. They are: our Militia and Defence, our Finances, and the Settlement of the Country.

As regards the first of these, my opinions have undergone no change. I have only to reiterate my great dissatisfaction that matters so peculiar and complicated in their nature should have been wholly committed to the agencies of inexperience and consequent incompetence. Whilst glad to see some steps in the right direction, I hope the time is not far distant when a system will be adopted which will afford increased and really efficient military instruction to our population, and yet be commensurate with our resources, and adapted to our circumstances.

The subject of our finances has been one of much anxiety to every thinking man, and I shall cordially support every wise measure for regulating our expenditure according to the means and resources of the Province; and also will hail with pleasure every honest effort made to carry out the wise spirit of our constitution, which requires that public disbursements should be kept strictly under Parliamentary control.

The settlement of the Province is a question that must necessarily engage much of the attention of the Member for this County. I think we have every reason to expect that a more liberal system will be adopted than has hitherto prevailed; and that by united effort on the part of all interested, we may secure better communication with the back country, and thereby ensure its more speedy settlement. I have undertaken a matter of importance in connection with this subject, which will require my presence at Quebec next week, and circumstances alone can determine the course I shall be called upon to pursue as regards the canvass of the County.

I take this opportunity of thanking very cordially those who have, without solicitation on my part, tendered me their support. I am not insensible to their good will, nor to the responsibilities that it may entail upon me.

I am, Gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
F. W. HAULTAIN.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE TRENT DIVISION

GENTLEMEN:

An Election will take place in September or October next, when you will be called upon to choose a Member to represent the Trent Division.

Having been elected by your confidence in 1863 to fill up the unexpired time occasioned by the decease of the late Hon. R. Massey, and the resignation of the Hon. Sidney Smith, I feel that during the past year, (certainly as much as any other) as it was possible for me to do in attending the two Sessions of Parliament, and also in attending to the requests of such of the constituents as have seen fit to honor me with their land and other matters, not immediately connected with Parliamentary duties.

We are about beginning a new era in the history of the nation of our posterity. The ground moves in the formation of a Ministry who pledge themselves to bury the feuds of the past, and to work together for the general good of the country, by bringing such measures before the next Session of Parliament as will tend to a final settlement of the sectional difficulties between Upper and Lower Canada, demands our serious consideration.

I may be permitted to state that I shall accord to them a fair trial, and whether in or out of Parliament, to assist by every means in my power the consummation of so desirable an object; trusting that Upper Canada may receive that which she is justly entitled to, and that both Provinces will be greatly benefited by the change.

I have concluded from the numerous personal requests, as also by letters from many parts of the Division, to again place myself at the disposal of the Electors, and if again honored with your confidence, to discharge the trust committed to me in as satisfactory a manner as possible.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,
Yours &c. &c.,

Another Matrimonial Hoax.

A few weeks ago an advertisement appeared, signed by a young lady who adopted the name of "Pauline" stating that she was desirous of finding a suitable partner. This announcement attracted the attention of an enterprising young Irishman, who is employed as a clerk in a large establishment at Leeds. He replied to the advertisement stating that he was a young man of 22, that his prospects were favourable, and that he was anxious to alter himself in matrimony with a lady apparently so eligible as the fair Pauline described herself to be. This delicate epistle he addressed to Enniskeele, in Ireland, to the address named in the advertisement, but instead of using a plain envelope, he enclosed his reply in one of the business envelopes of the firm. The letter duly travelled to Ireland, and no such personage as Pauline having been discovered, it was duly returned through the Dead Letter Office. The cashier of the firm at which M. M——was employed opened the letter-bag one morning, and saw this epistle, and also observing that the envelope bore the business address of the firm he opened it, and discovered John's secret. By way of trifling with the tender affections of the clerk, who was rolling up certain entries in the ledger at the opposite desk, he heartlessly determined to play John a trick. Several choice spirits were taken into the secret, and as the result of their deliberations, a lady at Leicester was induced to personate the fair Pauline, and this faithless female actually wrote to Mr. M——, inviting him to meet her at Manchester. Scene, the secluded area of the Victoria Station; time one o'clock p. m. One tenth of a boy hastened to keep tryst, but, to his great disappointment, no Pauline presented herself. A few days afterwards he received a very self-reproachful letter from disconsolate Pauline, in which she earnestly apologized for not being able to keep the engagement, and arranged to meet him at Liverpool last Saturday. Our young Irish friend swallowed the bait, and off he set for Liverpool. His destination was Frederick-street. Arrived at that delightful locality, John asked of a decent-looking Irishman if he knew where No. 165 was. "Oe, yes," said his brother from Erin, "it is a publishe-se." "Then perhaps you are aware whether a pretty girl called Pauline B—— lives there?" asked our simple-minded Leeds friend. "Poo my soul," answered his friend, "that I cannot say, be gorrah." John: "If you will go and ask the question, I have no objection to stand a drain." Murphy: "Faith, it is exacting you are I tenth I will go and see." Murphy soon returned from the gin palace, with the welcome intelligence that Mr. J. M——, from Leeds, was to walk in. Arrived in the house, our friend was warmly welcomed by a Liverpool gentlemen, who had been let into the secret, and whom, for the sake of particularity, we will call Mr. Jones. The enamoured swain: "I believe you have a young lady, a Miss Temple, residing here?" Mr. Jones: "Yes, we have, but she is out at present, but will return in a few minutes; pray, sit down"—Mr. M——: "Then she expects me?"—Mr Jones: "Oh, yes, she expects a gentleman to call."—Mr. M——: "Then I will trouble you to ring for a glass of good strong ale." Mr. M——obtained his beverage, and at this moment a number of gentlemen entered the room by one door, and a bevy of ladies by the other, until some fifty "friends" of the bride expectant were present. Mr. Jones then opened the ball by introducing Mr. M——as the gentleman from Leeds who had come to look after their Pauline, and the inamorata was received with a welcome more enthusiastic and overpowering than what he had bargained for. During a brief lull, Mr. Jones read a doggrel poem on the subject of Mr. M——'s disappointment, upon which the latter made a dash for the door, but finding been previously secured, and the bashful young Irishman was handed back to his chair. Then commenced the fun. Mr. M——first turned pale, then flushed with anger, as verse after verse of his "lament" were recited, and then he was adjudged to pay glasses round. The youthful Irishman's heart at length failed him; he shed bitter tears, invoked the aid of the police, but, alas, those guardians of the peace were not to be found. Mr.—then said: "Pray let me out; I have only half-a-crown, which you shall have, and I can get home with my return ticket." His quondam friends declared he must fork out a crown, and on his declaration of his inability to produce a coin of that denomination the ruthless friends of the deceitful Pauline called out for the whitewash and the brush. Mr.—now became thoroughly alarmed, and he threw his half-crown on the table, but this was speedily "melted" in drink.—Then commenced the spree. The women seized our Hamlet friend, dragged him about the room, disarranged his hair which had been beautifully curled and scented) and tormented him until he bellowed again with pain and rage. At length he was allowed to "make tracks" for the railway station, but the Mohawks were in his rear, and they chased him relentlessly through the streets. A "bobby," who turned up when he was not wanted, thought Mr.——must be a thief, and attempted to arrest him, but Johnny, like a second John Gilpin, distanced all his pursuers, and wended his way to Leeds.—Leeds Times.

THE BITER BIT.—Dr. M., an army surgeon during the American war, was very fond of a joke (if not perpetrated at his own expense), and had, moreover, a great contempt for citizen officers, who were more renowned for their courage than their scholarship. One day, at mess, after the decanter had made sundry perambulations of the table, Captain S., a brave and accomplished officer and a great wag, remarked to the Doctor—(who had been somewhat severe in his remarks on the literary deficiencies of some of the new officers)—"Doctor M., are you acquainted with Captain G.?" "Yes, I know him well," replied the Doctor, "he's one of the new set. But what of him?" "Nothing particular," replied Captain S., "I have just received a letter from him, and I will wager you a dinner of old port that you cannot guess in six guesses how he spells out." "Done," said the doctor, "its a wager." "Well! consonance guessing sair," S. "Ke double t." "No." "Ka,t,e." "No,try again." "Ca,t,e." "No, you have missed it again." "Well then," returned the Doctor. "Ca, double t." "No, that's not the way to try again—its your last guess." "C,a,g,h,t." "No" said S., "that's not the way: you have lost the wager." "Well," said the Doctor, with much petulence of manner, "how the devil does he spell it?" "Why he spells it C,a,p,t," replied S., with the utmost gravity. Amid the roar of the mess, and almost choking with rage, the Doctor sprang to his feet, exclaiming, "Captain S., I am too old a man to be trifled with in this manner."

It is said that a convict was lately enclosed into the service of a young married couple, where he was officiating as a very pretty lady's-maid, and had been doing all the duties of his role for three months. The horror of the young married lady, and stillness of the husband, may be imagined when the police said, "That young woman is the man we want."

Secretary for Canada.

ATTENTION is directed to the rate of premiums adopted by this Company, which will compare favorably with that of any other institution in Canada. Investments of Company's funds to the large amount of nearly five hundred thousand dollars have been completed in Canada; and as all business transactions are finally disposed of in the Province, the Scottish Provincial offers all the facilities presented by a purely local Company, while it possesses the additional advantage of a large capital, and an influential and responsible body of shareholders in Great Britain.

Policies effected on or before 31st January next will receive a full year's bonus over those effected thereafter.

Now, any one who is in need of a Pump would do well to get one of my Water-drawers at once. Mr. Henry E. Gray, Chemist, Montreal.

SIR,—I am most happy to state that my wife used Henry's Vermont Liniment, having accidentally got a needle run under her finger nail. The pain was most intense; but by using the Liniment, the pain was gone in a few minutes.

Yours very respectfully,

W. GIBSON.

Montreal, Dec. 19th, 1863.

Messrs. Henry & Co.

Having on various occasions used your liniment, I can honestly say to any that I have always found it beneficial. I have frequently used it for bowel complaint, and I have never known it to fail in effecting a cure. I think it the best medicine I ever used, for Diarhea summer complaint, and disorders of a similar character I have also found it a never failing specific for Colds, and for affections of the head. I always recommend it to my friends, and would not be without it in the house for any consideration.

N. H. DOWN'S
VEGETABLE BALSAMIC
ELIXIR.

A CERTIFICATE WORTH A MILLION.

An Old Physician's Testimony.

READ!

Waterbury, Vt., Nov. 24th, 1858.

Although I do not like the practice of Physicians recommending indiscriminately, the patent medicines of the day; yet after a trial of ten years, I am free to admit that there is one medicine before the public that any Physician can use in his practice, and recommend to the public with perfect confidence; that medicine is Dr. N. H. Downs' Vegetable Balsamic Elixir.

I have used it myself with the very best success, and now, whenever I am troubled with a Cough or Cold, I invariably use it. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who are suffering from a Cold or a Cough, for the Croup, Whooping Cough, and all diseases tending to consumption, and to the Profession as a reliable article.

I am satisfied of its excellence beyond a doubt, having conversed personally with the Rev. N. H. Downs, about it. He informed me of the principal ingredients of which the Elixir is composed, all of which are purely Vegetable and perfectly safe.

J. B. WOODWARD, M.D.
Now Brigade Surgeon U. S. Army.

This old, time-tried, standard remedy still maintains its popularity. When all others have proved inefficient, the Elixir alone continues to give satisfaction.—Use it for

COUGHS, COLDS, CATARRH, ASTHMA, CROUP,

Incipient Consumption and all diseases of the Throat, Chest and Lungs.

Thirty years ago the Elixir first made its appearance, and given then, in its primitive and imperfect state, produced such extraordinary results that it became, at once, a general favourite. Many have made it, who it really is, a Family Medicine.

For as more than half the diseases "to which flesh is heir," originate from colds, so this may be considered a general preventive of all diseases, by removing the primeval cause.

AMELIA

Should always keep this Family Physician at hand, and by its timely use save hundreds of dollars that would otherwise be swallowed up in discharging doctor's fees.

Dr. TAPPAN,
Dear Sir,
Your German Ointment I have used in my family for a good many years, and consider it a very good remedy for Sore Eyes. I also always do so once each spring. I am satisfied to have my pulpit, but when asked to recommend it into my eyes for a short time, suppose began to grow stronger and get better. I am now able to read print on the 20th day passage.

THE FLIGHT OF THE HOURS.

Beneath the starry arch,
Naught resteth or is still,
But all things hold their march,
As if by one great will;
Move one, move all;
Hark to the footfall;
On, on, forever!

Yon sheaves were once but seed;
Will ripens into deed;
As eave-drops swell the streams;
Day thoughts feed nightly dreams;
And concord soundeth strong,
As echo follows song
On, on, forever!

By night, the stars on high,
The hours reveal their being;
They whisper and go by,
"I never watch in vain,"
Move one, move all;
Hark to the footfall;
On, on, forever!

They pass the cradle-bed,
And there a promise shed;
They pass the moist new grave,
And bid rank verdure wave;
They bear through every clime
The harvest of all time,
On, on, forever!

How I won my Victoria Cross.

At the outset of the mutiny I had a narrow escape—clearly my usual good luck had not deserted me. About two years before the first hideous rumor spread abroad, I went out from England as a cadet in the Honorable Company's service.

I liked the life, liked the country, and did not find the climate unpleasant; but during my second year a fever (the result of wild fowl shooting) pulled me down somewhat, and made my sick leave to the hills very acceptable, if not quite necessary; I was, at all events, well enough to enjoy myself thoroughly; and when in the very midst of the gay round of balls and pic-nics, billiard matches and flirtations, there came the first startling news of the disaffection of some of the native regiments at no great distance from our cantonments, I did not hesitate an hour in throwing up the remainder of my leave, and rejoining the regiment.

My letter from my old crony Mitford (the first note of warning, by-the-bye, that had reached our station) spoke of the confidence of all, from the gray-haired colonel to the new griffin, in the fidelity of our sepoys. In fact, my motive for hurrying to them was his report that they were likely to march to overawe the mutineers, if the affair turned out sufficiently serious for such a step. I was consequently as much surprised as horror stricken at learning, when only half a day's journey from the cantonments, that every officer of one had been murdered in cold blood by the treacherous sepoys. Not one had escaped from the butchery.

There could be no doubt of the truth of the appalling tale, for I got my information from an old havildar, who had himself fled having incurred the enmity of his fellows by his vain efforts to save the colonel—the only one of all the corps faithful to his salt, as I afterwards learned. Of course I inquired after my poor friend Mitford, and he told me that he had himself seen him stabbed in the back by his own syce, as he was about to mount his horse.

After the first shock I felt no hesitation as to what course I should pursue. I had passed, a few miles back, the head-quarters of a Queen's regiment, and thither I retraced my steps, taking the havildar with me. The white-headed colonel listened with a flush of indignation to my brief report, and the fuller details of the native officer. His first impulse was to march to attack the miscreants, but, on the havildar informing him of the route they had taken, and the rapidity of their retreat, he was instinctively forced to abandon the design. A long pursuit would have left unprotected the district he had orders to watch, and would, very probably, have disarranged the plans of the general. In spite of the veteran's burning desire for action, he was too good a soldier to yield to the temptation—even a success might be too dearly bought.

Now I began to think of what I was myself to do. My regiment was no longer in existence, and there was not a corps of ours near at hand, so I applied to the colonel for leave to do duty with his battalion. Being rather short of subalterns, he gladly assented, and directed the adjutant, who had been summoned to join the conclave, to write for the formal sanction of the arrangement.

Thus I became pro. tem. an integral portion of H. M.——; but no, I will not give the number of that gallant regiment, for many of the actors in the following scenes are still alive; and for the same reason I shall substitute feigned names throughout.

When I had accompanied Herring, the adjutant, to the mess room, I was speedily surrounded by a group of excited auditors, which continually increased, each new comer eagerly questioning me, and commenting on my replies. Presently the door opened, and in came a lieutenant, who from his uniform was evidently on duty. As my eye fell upon him, I started and stared, for surely that face was familiar to me.

With a similar puzzled look of recognition on his part, we had quickly grasped each other's hands, as we exclaimed unanimously, "Harry Stoneleigh!" "Fred Dering!" Rapid questions and answers speedily put us in possession of the outlines of each other's history since he had left me at Rugby, nearly four years previously.

We had been on friendly terms at the old school, but by no means cronies, for which we were scarcely fitted indeed. I being restlessly active and full of harmless mischief; while he, though taking his part manfully at both cricket and football, was singularly sedate and thoughtful for his years. Indeed I had believed (probably a mere fancy from my idea of his dream) that he was intended for the church. But though our intimacy had been so slight, we now met, almost, as if we had been old friends. Such is often the case with public school boys, and certainly not least among Rugbeans, for the memory of the dear old school with its happy days is a strong tie.

For more than a month we remained in comparative inaction. The contagion was spreading; all around us the native regiments were deserting their standards under circumstances of the utmost atrocity, but in vain we looked for orders to march to their chastisement.

Colonel Armstrong even wrote to remonstrate, but the general's orders were inexplicable. We were to maintain ourselves where we were, breaking up if possible any bands of rebels that might appear in our immediate neighborhood, and holding out to the last man, if a stronger force attempted to dislodge us. It was absolutely necessary, the general said, that we should keep open his communications to the southward, and it must be done at any sacrifice. The colonel was to do his utmost to induce one or two native princes near us, who were supposed well affected, to aid us in this point. Such were the orders, and of course they had to be obeyed, while we were left to console ourselves for our forced inaction by the reflection that it was a vitally important duty that was thus intrusted to us.

Once or twice we drove before us straggling bodies of mutineers, who passed within reach, and on several occasions we were on the alert, expecting an attack with which we seemed threatened by a more imposing force. But we had altogether little more than the usual routine of duty to occupy our time.

During this interval I saw much of Stoneleigh. Though we differed widely in many respects, there was in fact a close intimacy between us. I found that his old strictness had grown upon him; he was more sedate than ever, and shunned many amusements which were and are perfectly harmless in my eyes. Still there was no cant about him; he never intruded his opinions upon any one, but kept them to himself unless he was asked for them, when indeed he spoke plainly enough. It was impossible not to respect one who had acted up to his own convictions so conscientiously, and his good natured obliging disposition could not but make him liked. So we were excellent friends, but hardly constant companions, for my strong tastes for more active pursuits led me often to join very different companions.

The regiment was not what is commonly considered a fast one, but it contained a certain set who did their best to earn it that character. For the first day or two this clique, seeing me so much with Stoneleigh, held aloof, but then a circumstance occurred that led them to welcome me heartily into their circle.

Some neighboring villagers came to the colonel with doleful complaints of damage done by wild boars, and a hunt was quickly organized. I had taken my favorite Arab to the hills with me, but, as it was out of sorts, had left it behind for a day or two. Now, however, my syce arrived with it in the nick of time and I gladly prepared to join in what was a favorite amusement of mine.

As we sat on our horses, awaiting the result of the beater's efforts, I caught a sneering remark levelled at myself, as expressive of wonder at one of "the saints" trusting sportsman. I must confess that a sneer had considerable effect upon me now, and in those days I had done very little towards overcoming the weakness. I consequently rattled into a reckless determination to show that the best of them would find me difficult to rival.

The opportunity I desired soon presented itself. A big boar was driven from the covert, but instead of taking the line of open country, it doubled between the beaters and their expectant horsemen over such broken ground that none of them dreamt of following it.

Now was my time. One touch of the spurs and my fiery Arab was bounding over rocks and gullies to the infinite risk of my neck. A nullah, the banks of which the boar descended and ascended, while my Arab took it in its stride, enabled me to overtake the brute. It must have been as much by luck as by skill, in the state of excitement I was in, that I drove my spear clean through its huge carcase.

I was soon surrounded and warmly congratulated on my success, while expressions of wonder and even of remonstrance at my foolhardiness were not wanting. Among the foremost were Captain Black and Mr. Legge, the leaders of the fast set, and I had the satisfaction of seeing that I had completely altered their estimate of me. As we rode home together, after a capital day's sport, in which I had done enough to maintain the character I had so suddenly acquired, Legge asked me to join a party in his rooms that evening after mess, and I willingly agreed to do so. I found a pleasant jovial set assembled, and at supper which followed our game of loo, we wound up our reminiscences of that day by forming more than one plan for future sport.

Henceforth I was much with this set, for they found that I was ready to play cards or sing a song, hunt or shoot, make a match at billiards or back my Arab's speed, and they appreciated me accordingly, while I found in them pleasant companions in many of my favorite pursuits.

Stoneleigh, I could see, hardly approved of my new intimates, but as I did not ask his advice on the subject, he adhered to his usual course, and did not volunteer it. He continued as friendly as before whenever I joined him for a quiet ride, and we still frequently went to each other's rooms for a sociable chat, which often branched into a more serious conversation than Black or Legge would have given me credit for.

There was another frequent place of meeting for us on neutral ground. I have a decided liking for female society, and this was certainly not the less strong for being difficult to satisfy at the time. It so happened that only one officer in the regiment, Captain Reid, had his wife with him; all the others had taken flight. Mrs. Reid had, however, a visitor, her younger sister, Alice Selby, and the two together were a host in themselves.

The Reids were very sociable, hospitable people, and I soon found myself a regular habitue of the house, which was singularly pleasant and cheerful. Mrs. Reid, who was little more than twenty, was a pretty little brunette, so full of gaiety and fun, that time never were heavy where she kept away, and a solemn face in her presence was an impossibility. Her very laugh was infectious, as joyous seemed its musical tones. No wonder that she was such a universal favorite.

But much as she was liked, there were a few, and I was of the number, who gave the palm to her sister. If she was not like Mrs. Reid, the very life of any society of which she formed a part, the prime promoter of fun and frolic, she could at least take her share in anything then set afoot; and she possessed other good qualities altogether her own. She had a gentle winning manner, far more feminine in my opinion than her sister's merry air, and her soft glances made me dream more than once of those tender deep blue eyes, beaming, half-shily, half-trustfully from under the long lashes of dark brown. Mrs. Reid constantly enlisted me to assist her in carrying out the gay schemes of the moment, but when left to myself I was far more often to be found by the side of the gentle Alice.

I quickly saw that Stoneleigh, who was also a frequent visitor of the Reids, agreed with me in preferring the unmarried sister. In fact I had never seen him break through his usual reserve so much as he did in paying his somewhat awkward attentions to Alice Selby.

For a time I watched with some curiosity to see what reception she would give him. She certainly vouchsafed him a very encouraging welcome. If she did not avoid him, she never drew him to her side, by that silent but eloquent invitation which a woman can always convey by an almost imperceptible manner, quite free from any imputation of unfeminine boldness. And when he sought her, or they were thrown together, there was a reserve in her manner, a grave, polite dignity in her air, which convinced me that she felt perfect indifference at the very least.

With me she was very different. She would call me to her, or even seek my companionship with a frank but gentle manner peculiar to her. It was I who was beckoned from amidst a waiting group to mount her, and then keep at her side during the evening ride. It was I who was her refuge when she would avoid any unwelcome bore; I who was privileged to attend upon her and to execute my little commissions for her. With me she would display a gaiety and vivacity she rarely showed at other times; and my sallies would often call forth her laugh of silvery sweetness, so different from the ringing tones of her sister's.

Though I took care to hide it from Stoneleigh, I felt considerable triumph at the distinction thus made between us. Not that I was "in love" with Alice Selby, or that I attributed to her any such feeling for me, but I was naturally flattered by the manifest preference of such a charming girl, and one whom I had liked so much.

I had no suspicion then of what I am now convinced is the truth. Alice looked upon me as quite a boy, and so was more frankly good-natured with me than she would have been with one of maturer years. As my senior by (I'll say three months) she considered that she, not I, was the protector. For three months in a formidable difference at the age of nineteen, especially in the lady's eyes, when the seniority is on her side. I ought to have known, too, that Alice's reserve towards Stoneleigh was no bad sign for him.

One day when Stoneleigh and I were taking tiffin at the Reids, some one mentioned a match I was to ride that evening.

"Why don't you give your beautiful Arab some name?" asked Alice Selby.

"I had thought of one, but I did not venture. May I call it Alice?" I rejoined.

"Thanks for the compliment," said she, laughingly; "but I must beg to decline the honor."

"Why?" I asked.

"Oh, she thinks it might lead to confusion," interrupted Mrs. Reid, who had noticed my once or twice using inadvertently her sister's Christian name; or she is afraid of causing jealousy," she continued with a sly glance towards Stoneleigh, whom she was rather fond of thus rallying.

Both Alice and Stoneleigh looked somewhat disconcerted, and I began to suggest all sorts of names. Meanwhile I sat thinking till I presently asked, "May I call it Celia?"

"Of course, if you like it," replied Alice, seeing I was appealing to her; but what your reason for the choice?"

"Don't you see it is an anagram of Alice? but you have consented now, and it is too late to retreat," said her sister with a triumphant laugh.

Captain Reid, who was to be judge, now suggested that they should drive instead of riding to the course.

I kept a good look out for their carriage, and when it arrived, as there was still a few minutes before the race, I entered to where it was drawn up by the winning post. Alice was entering a fresh bet in favor of my Arab, in whose success she seemed all along to take much interest. To enable her to manage better the little pencil case, more ornamental than useful, that hung from her chain, she had removed her glove, and as I returned them she let it fall. Springing from my saddle I recovered it, and held it out to her. But Mrs. Reid took it from my hand and passed it to her husband exclaiming gaily, "Add it to the stakes, Charles. You ought to give something, Alice, as you are godmother to the favorite."

I could not wait to listen to her protestations, as Legge now galloped up to tell me my time was up. We were left to weigh, so I had only to canter to the starting post, and pulling off my light overcoat, appear in the brilliant silk.

Quickly we were off, and I watched my antagonist narrowly, for it was a new horse of Captain White's, and I knew nothing of its capabilities. How strange that its stride standing, as it did a full hand above Celia, would make it dangerous; but in good time I thought I had the best of it, and, paying on the wonderful endurance of my mare, I had determined to force the winning. It seemed that I was right, for as the horses neared the winning post, and already the shouts of the spectators hailed me the victor. But just as the game contention my heart, a cry rushed across the course under Celia's feet. In vain I attempted to pull her aside; it was too late. There was a crash and—darkness.

When I recovered my senses I was lying on the course, Alice supporting my head and bathing my temples with water; while Captain Reid was passing his handkerchief over my limbs.

"Thank God!" he exclaimed, as I opened my eyes, "he is only stunned, and I think there are no bones broken."

He on one side and Stoneleigh on the other supported me to the carriage. "Jump in, Stoneleigh," he said "and see them safe to Derring's quarters. I will take your horse to ride, as no one but the owner knows."

"How is Celia?" I asked in a low tone, as we drove along, for I still felt sick and faint.

"It has only a sprained shoulder, and they say it is not bad," replied Stoneleigh.

"Are you much hurt?" asked Alice softly.

"Oh no!" and I tried the full, but the moan is safe," I answered. "But I learn how you your bets and myself to endure."

"I think I do not felt—you are still as pale as a ghost," she said and boldness her scent bottle for me. The fellow given which she had taken off while bathing my temples, was in the same hand, and I greatly withdrew it, she did not oppose me, although a rosy tint that made her cheeks more beautiful. I noticed that Stoneleigh winced, but no more was said, for we had reached my door, and Captain Reid, fearing for constraint in, was already there with the surgeon.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA.

The full wing article appears in the N. Y. Tribune of the 28th instant. It will commend itself to public attention from its singularity of the views enunciated by the London Spectator to which it has reference:—

If the plan of forming all the provinces of British North America into one Confederation should be successful, this new commonwealth would infallibly be in a short time the second power of the American Continent—second only to the United States. In point of population it leaves now only inferior to Mexico and Brazil, both of which countries it must be sure to exceed within a few years.

In point of territory, the Confederation of British North America would be almost equal to the present extent of the United States. The Toronto Leader even claims for it a little superiority, estimating the territory of British North America at 3,973,078 English square miles, and maintaining that the territory of the United States, the extent of which it says is generally overrated by their inhabitants, is found on a critical examination not to exceed 2,964,600. We deem it unnecessary to enter with our Toronto contemporary into a discussion of this geographical controversy. We take it as conceded on all sides that the United States, if they retain their present territory and British North America, if the proposed union can be effected, will both rank among the most extensive countries of the world; but that, in point of population, our northern neighbour must, from climate reasons, remain forever considerably behind the United States.

The largest portions of British North America are the Hudson's Bay Territory, which The Toronto Leader sets down at 2,300,000 square miles, the two Canadas, the estimates of whose area vary from 200,000 to 300,000 square miles, and British Columbia which is roughly estimated at 200,000 square miles. Two of these, the Hudson's Bay Territory and British Columbia, have been hitherto only of commercial, not of political importance. Trustworthy statements as to their population are entirely wanting. But both are beginning to play their part in the history of the American Continent. British Columbia has especially attracted the attention of the world by its newly-discovered goldfields. It has received its own Governor and its own Anglican Bishop; and it has begun its life as a distinct British American Colony. From documents laid before the English Parliament during 1863, it appears that 75 emigrants left the United Kingdom in 1862 for British Columbia, and 5,119 for Vancouver's Island. Two useful roads had been constructed, one from Lillooet and one from Yale, both terminating at Alexandria, from which the Fraser has few obstacles to its navigation. From Lillooet about 120 miles of road have been completed, at a cost of $120,000. Gold continues to be abundantly found, though many of the old spots are abandoned, and Cariboo is now the chief place for mining operations, where in one locality the produce is said to be $2,000 per running foot of land.

The immense tracks of land belonging to the Hudson's Bay Territory are also likely to assume greater importance than they have possessed heretofore. The Company intends to open up to colonization a large part of country in the southern portion of the territory, containing some 60,000 square miles, and of remarkable fertility. It is expected that this land will be settled from Upper Canada, for a much larger number of persons are now interested in the question than heretofore, owing to the re-organization of the proprietary of the Hudson's Bay Company on a more popular basis.

In the autobiography of Dr. Beecher mention is made of a certain old Deacon who was so economical, that he boasted of having kept all his accounts for thirty years with a quill pen, and said he had thought so closely upon the subject of economy, that he knew exactly how to lean his arm on the table so as not to take the cap off, and how to set down his foot with the least possible wear to the sole of the shoe.

Where the Rascals Retreated.

An instance of the cool cliekness and presence of mind which distinguished this celebrated character, we extract the following from "All the Year Round:"

After the turning period of Vidocq's condemnation forgery, he was under a guard of convicts from the bagnio at Toulon, to undergo imprisonment during three years. On one occasion, in the Rue Mazarine, the principal street of Lille, he overheard an audacious project, free to form, and proceeded thereunder, but quit away by throwing himself into the Rue Mazarine. Another time, the Commissaire Jacquard got information that he was going to dine at the Rue Notre Dame, or a house where meals were served for small parties of people. The commissary proceeded there, accompanied by four gendarmes, whom he left on the ground floor, and went up stairs himself to the very room where Vidocq was seated at the table with a couple of young ladies. The fourth guest, a recreating sergeant, had not yet arrived. Vidocq recognized the commissary, who never having seen the object of his search, had not the same advantage in his disguise, moreover, would have thrown out all the written descriptions in the world. Without being discovered by the least, Vidocq accosted the intruder in no easy tone of voice, and requested him to step into a side room, which had a glass door opening into the large dining room, the pretence that he had something of importance to communicate.

"You are looking out for Vidocq, Sir? If you will only wait ten minutes I will point him out to you. There is his knife and fork and his plate, he cannot be long. When he comes in I will make a sign to you; but, if you do so close, I doubt whether you will be able to take him because he is armed and is resolved to defend himself."

"My men are on the stairs, and if he gets away, they."—

"Do not leave them there on any account. If Vidocq catch sight of them, he will suspect there is something in the wind, and your bird will soon be flown."

"But where can I put them?"

"Eh! Mon Dieu, in the little room. But above all, take care not to make any noise; that would spoil everything. I have quite as much interest as you can have in getting him out of the way."

The commissary and his agents retired, therefore into the little room. The door was strong, and was double locked. Their unknown friend, sure of making his retreat, shouted to them. "You are looking out for Vidocq who has escaped and escaped you.—Good-bye till next time."

CANADA AND THE WAR.—There are a class of people who contend that Canada would have been far better off in a material point of view, had she been one of the States of the American Union. Those who imagine this had better take their gazette and calculate what would have been Canada's gains in men and money had she joined the Federal Union. The population of the Canadas may be roughly estimated at 3,000,000,—about one seventh of the Northern States. It follows, then, that had Canada been a State, she would have been required to furnish one seventh, in men and money towards the suppression of the rebellion. Official returns state that the North has raised 2,000,000 for the war, and it therefore follows that in the case supposed, Canada's contribution would have been 285,700! Then let us look at the debt. The most sanguine of the Federalists place the war debt at the end of the present year at three thousand millions, ($3,000,000,000); Canada's share of this too, would have been one seventh, or $428,570,000! Setting aside other and political considerations, it follows that we are the gainers by 285,700 men and $428,570,000, by remaining firm and loyal to the British Crown. We think the foregoing the best argument to confound any annexation-itching Canadian or other British subjects who prates of the "glory" of the Republic and the immense benefit a political union with the United States would have been to Canada. We may mention, in passing, that New York State alone has sent $10,000,000 to the war, and a draft of 500,000 more is shortly expected.

A FAMILY OF SIXTY-TWO CHILDREN.—In the Harleian MSS., we find mention of a certain Scotch weaver who had no less than 62 children and all by one wife. This family included four daughters, who lived to be women, and the rest of the three sons and two were boys, who all lived to be baptized. Out of these, 46 naturally reached man's estate. The writer, one Thomas Gibbons, adds, that during the time of his fruitfulness on the part of his wife, the husband was absent for seventeen years in the Low Countries, where he served under Capt. Selby; and after his return home his wife was again delivered of three children at a birth, and continued in due time to such births until she ceased child bearing. It appears that Sir John Bowes, and other wealthy Northumbrian gentlemen of quality, adopted and brought up the children in imitation of ten and twelve a-piece, and thus the number was disposed of by others among the Scottish and English gentlemen on the Border county.—Once a Week.

Of all the ingenious ways of raising money for the Sanitary Commission, that devised by the people of the town of Catasauqua, Pennsylvania, is probably the oddest. The male citizens agreed to decide by vote who was the prettiest girl in town, and it was declared in favor of Miss Hettie S. Rothrock, by a majority of two hundred and eighty votes. Each vote was accompanied by the sum of twenty-five cents, and the proceeds were given to the Sanitary Fair as the contribution of the fairest beauty. What makes the matter more interesting is the fact that Miss Rothrock is nursing wounded soldiers in the Army of the Potomac.

A Western editor, not noted for brilliancy, says that he would rather put questions than respond to them. He has probably read, that fools may ask questions but that it takes wise men to answer them.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 11, 1864.

THE COUNTY.

We have nothing material to say, at the present writing, on this interesting question. The Quebec despatches from the Provincial will, no doubt, be in type before we write. Meanwhile the election news does for discussing "the coming man," and for ventilating domestic, personal and political, gossip. We say "coming man," for there is at present every prospect that the gentleman who is now fortnightly before the county will be returned.

Various rumours of opposition have been afloat, but they have all died away, and the likelihood of an election by acclamation becomes more and more apparent as the period for it approaches.

Will Col. Haultain have any opposition? This is the question. In reply, another might be asked, Why should he?

With the present popular union of parties on particular ends, any good and reliable man who offers to support that union for the accomplishment of those ends will make a proper representative. Almost all agree as to the desirability of the constitutional changes proposed.

There is now no political issue before the country but perhaps some would-be-great one—with more vanity than judgment—may attempt to raise an issue by opposing upon principle the changes spoken of, or any change in the constitution and upon this ask the support of the country; or—in the hope of doing thought worthy by opposing worth—such has one may enter the field with the Colonel on personal grounds.

The other seat, as appeal to the electors on behalf of Col. Haultain will not, we are persuaded, be in vain.

Of the popularity of the effort to place our relations with Lower Canada upon a satisfactory basis, we have ample evidence. Newspapers generally, even with laudations of it, and they, though not always an index to the public mind, may, in this matter, be taken as expressing the popular will. The intelligent County of Peterborough will not, we apprehend, be behind its neighbors in appreciating and encouraging the good work. Whether the opponents of Col. Haultain, upon the political ground spoken of, in private or at public meeting.

Of the Colonel, personally, little need be said. He is well known to the county as a man who practices sound doctrine, and practices what he preaches. In every sense of the word he is a good man. The leading newspaper of Upper Canada, in its issue of Saturday last, said:—"We are pleased to learn that Lieut.-Col. Haultain, the former Reform member for this County, (Peterborough), has consented to be a candidate for the seat in Parliament, rendered vacant by the recent death of Mr. Cameron. A little done will make promises and intentions, but does he trucks and cringe, to all views are before the people through his address, and they may depend upon their being faithfully acted upon. We cannot hesitate as to the solicitation of the Reform party and many leading Conservatives, and this assures us of his popularity.

A few of the small fry among his former opponents may bark a while, but it will do no harm. Even many of the leading men of them, a cordial support is tendered, and any opposition enabled by the absence of the assistance of these men will be very many minded.

We confidently anticipate a quick return by acclamation, and we will heartily rejoice to see one who so well merits the honor again sitting in Parliament as our representative.

"United we Stand, Divided we Fall."

At this moment, we do not recollect which of the symbolic fraternities takes the above for their motto; but since it fits well our circumstances we will adopt it without cavil.

But a very short time ago there was every appearance that the seeds of disunion were so thoroughly thrown amongst us that nothing but disaster awaited us. At home we were divided amongst ourselves, and the division was marked by an acrimony that would have done credit to our neighbors across the lake not many years ago. The future seemed dark—turn where we would it seemed as if there was no solution to our difficulties. Nor were we looked on in the mother country with much more favor. The party in power, with a specious cant that did great credit to their political ability, had contrived to represent the Reformers of Upper Canada as a discontented, ill-disposed people—that concessions would mollify, and no sacrifice short of complete submission would satisfy. They represented us as a people adverse to monarchial institutions, with a strong hankering for connection with the United States—so much so that the British journals were almost all against us, and rumors not slow to tell us that they had ceased to care for us, and that our future was a matter of very little concern to the people of Great Britain. It would not be difficult, we apprehend, to find the reason for this apparent want of appreciation at home. As a rule the people of Great Britain know very little about us; they know only that we were continually quarreling; that a minority of the Canadian people were continually agitating and perpetually finding fault. They did not take into account the fact that in Canada there were two peoples whose interests were distinctly opposite, whose language and laws were totally different, and that there might be great room for complaint on our part. They were apt to argue that the subject of union of Canada, with all the great commercial advantages and many wealthy. They were not aware that although it is a minority in the Legislature, no more, perhaps, than for one-third than the governing party, which they know, but that united Lower Canada had increased at least slowly, Upper Canada had made strides so rapid, both in population and material wealth as to be far ahead of her French neighbor; and that while we far exceeded them in population and wealth, and were much more heavily taxed—paying no less than three-fourths of the whole revenue—we were allowed only an equal share in the Government. They knew from the fact that Upper Canada always invariably voted as one man, Upper Canada, by the defection of a few of her members, [illegible] Ministry, whatever the [illegible] necessities of all! Now things are changed. People in the mother country begin to see that we are a loyal people, that we ask nothing but justice, and that so far from entertaining republican ideas we are, if possible, much the more loyal of the two divisions. On the future of the Upper Provinces depends in a great measure our success as a people, —and on us will fall the greatest share of the burden of repaying the debt which has been contracted almost against our will.

This state of matters could not continue, and the establishment of direct steam communication with England, and the consequent frequent interchange of news, has given the people there a more intimate knowledge of our affairs. They now know us better, and hail with pleasure the appearance of a change in our mode of Government that will give more stability to our institutions, enable us more efficiently to regulate the management of our finances, and promptly and laboriously to meet our liabilities.

It depends, then, upon the people of Upper Canada that the fond opinion that has been formed of its continue to exist? let us have for our motto: "Union." Let all parties in the Province, whatever they may have felt before, at any rate, in the future, determine that the progress of the Province will be their chief concern. And now, when Reformers and Conservatives are both alike alive to the necessity of an improvement in our governmental arrangements, let them cordially support the Government that has been so happily formed to carry out the needed reforms. We are often told that the new arrangements will be an impossibility—that the men who have pledged themselves to carry it out never intend to do so, and that means will be taken by them to make the whole theory a failure. We believe this is a wrong view of the matter. The gentlemen at the head of the Government have solemnly pledged themselves to carry the arrangements out, voluntarily in their places in the House; they have come forward and declared their determination to submit such a measure, at the next meeting of the Legislature, as will enable each section to regulate its own affairs. The idea that they are not in earnest—that trickery is meant—is surely too monstrous. That men who have a reputation to sustain, both at home and abroad, should, voluntarily, for the sake of a little while longer continuance in office, completely and forever degrade themselves in the eyes of all honest men, and ruin themselves forever in the estimation of the country, is not for a moment to be entertained. We believe that fears on this head are groundless; and that our duty, under the circumstances, is plain support by every means in our power to the present Government, so that if failure does ruin our present good prospects the fault may not be ours, but that the blame may be laid on those parties who have produced the failure. If failure to arrange our sectional difficulties should occur, either from the bad faith of any of the parties to the arrangement or the treachery of any of our own Upper Canada friends, the consequences will be dreadful; and it will be well for us if we can show to the Imperial Government—and what is of more importance: to the people of the mother country—that the failure was not for want of sufficient support on our part. And let us strive (whatever complications may result from the present combination of parties) to be able to show that they were not rendered more tangled by our unmanageableness and impracticability.

About Honest Abraham and the Americans.

"ALAS POOR YORICK!"

For four days we have been among old friends in Yankee land, but what a change; a year ago we remember sitting in the same spot in which we pen these lines, and in the same company too, and would not have dared to suggest even in the mildest form that President Lincoln was not the greatest man under heaven, that General Grant was not superior in military genius to a thousand Wellingtons—and that the United States was not the greatest country under the sun, the freest, the most enlightened and the best country for the industrious man. "Blasphemia-mutilator." Things are changed with a vengeance, the least treason spoken on every side, Lincoln condemned a thousand times in a day to the hottest corner of "Hades." Grant called a bungler and no better than a swindling contractor, whilst this fine country, we are piteously informed, has gone to the devil, and is not fit for a dog to live in; even the poor cur must be franked before he can take an airing with a three dollar stamp.

The conduct of the wants on all hands declared to have been grossly mismanaged. Shoddy contractors rule the roast, and whatever means will destroy the most material and cause bloodshed to the greatest amount of gain, in the best policy even if it should end in defeat and disgrace. The depreciation of the currency, too, is the subject of continual complaint. I had to pay 50 cents a pound for butter to-day, said our host, is not that horrid, I wonder what we are coming to. A yard of cotton, we are told, cost from [illegible] shillings. We met yesterday a poor fellow, a full more yankee, with an interminable linen coated over his black suit, who declared he had just given two dollars and sixty cents for a dollar of silver, on account of his having to go to Canada. Another one remarking to us a great fool to pay so much, he pleasantly whined "Well I guess I wanted to go to St. Catharines, and when a fellow's taken short, why, he must help himself." Then he wished Lincoln in a hot place. Everything is taxed, matches require a cent stamp on every copper bunch, cake and beer are taxed from seven to twenty dollars each, a silver watch 50 cents. If honest Abe only heard half the good wishes expressed for him here, he could not sleep very sound.

No one seems to favor the Administration but placemen and contractors. Passing at one hotel-door just now we heard an animated discussion between two gentlemen, who were undoubtedly using some such expressions as these "We will whip the cursed nigger drivers if it takes the last man and our last dollar." "Grant will blow Richmond into atoms one o week either." "The man that in fits of pique should be turned first feathered and then sent south." "The Democrats," we will see about what can be done with them, it was not fit for ears polite.

Curious to know who it was that spoke so favorably of the Administration and so confidently of the continuance and success of the war. We enquired of the Hotel-keeper who it was. He said, the fat gentleman in black is a custom house officer, and the other army contractor going south with a lot of cavalries. We were enlightened then, these men had been paid in the morning their [illegible] dollars and all efforts to arrest them [illegible] by the latter. They [illegible] dollar by dexterous pocket is emptied in the blood of the smuggled victim and watered with the tears of many a widow and orphan.

Yesterday we saw a piteous sight, thirty little orphan boys being drilled, all orphans whose fathers have been killed in this cruel war, and whose mothers had either gone before or died since their husbands fell. We were told there were over three hundred war orphans in this little place (Minnehaha) and the population does not reach 3,000.

The Largest Casting ever made in Canada.

It was our privilege, on Saturday last, to be invited to be present at the casting of John Gartshore Esq., Dundas, when the largest casting that has ever been made in Canada was completed. Leaving Hamilton by the G. W. Railway about two o'clock, we were in Dundas in a few minutes, and wended our way to the foundry. On entering we were surprised at the size and capacity of the works; steam engines and water-wheels were strewn in all directions, whilst immense pieces of metal of all shapes and sizes and in all degrees of forwardness toward completion finish were in the hands of the busy workmen. Here we saw some of the small portable engines for which Mr. Gartshore is so famous, further on we saw immense cylinders intended for steamers, we measured one and found it 60 inches diameter, and were shown part of another one of the same size they were just commencing—these are intended for two propellers being built at St. Catherines. But the foundry proper was the great scene of attraction, and already an excited crowd were peeping in at every opening. Having gained admittance, we were not only surprised but awed by the scene. Three immense furnaces heated by a powerful blast driven by two steam engines and a water-wheel were ever and anon pouring forth molten iron into huge goblets, these, again, were raised by a powerful crane and poured into a huge iron tank. We have often wondered previously how twenty tons of iron could be melted at once, but the thing was soon explained. The three furnaces we saw seemed to be able to melt about 3,000 pounds each per hour, and as the iron was melted it was put into the huge reservoir. At the time of our arrival there were 25,000 lbs of molten metal in the tank, and busy and half melted men were constantly pouring in more. The heat was intense, and a fine engine was constantly at work moistening and cooling the floor. How the pot fellows who were handling the goblets seemed to relish a dip in cold water; after a roasting at the furnace mouth, they would run dripping with sweat and dip themselves head and shoulders into a large tank in a corner. We had not stood long in the foundry, although we were as far from the furnace and the huge tank as possible, till we began to envy them, the heat in the whole building was intense, and on noticing our neighbours we saw drops of sweat hanging from every hair, whilst we felt it trickling all over our own person. Shortly after there we had an accident, and nearly a fatal one, one of the goblets had been charged with about 4,000 lbs. of melted iron, and was being raised by a huge crane in order to pour it into the tank, when the bottom burnt out and gave way, the red hot fluid metal spurted out in all directions, and in an moment the floor of the foundry for many feet round was paved with a carpet of the hottest kind, everything combustible was instantly on fire, the men's clothes, the wooden platforms and moulding flasks were all afire. Fortunate then for Mr. Gartshore that the precaution to have a fire engine in the shop had been taken, it was soon at work and the flames were quickly silenced; but this delayed the casting and the poor fellows in charge had a longer roasting. At last all was ready, and the huge company among whom we noticed Mr. Notman M. P., Mrs. Notman and Miss Notman, Mr. Beattie of the Great Western, Captain McCall of Hamilton, and about a hundred other ladies and gentlemen were gathered round the crater. The sluice gates were opened and the boiling metal began to pour forth at first gently but soon in a furious storm, a cry was raised that it was unmanageable and the crowd began to scream fire in all directions whilst the boiling metal sent a fierce rain in all directions over the workmen and visitors near, but busy and daring hands were at work, and in the midst of that fiery rain, Mr. Gartshore and the men succeeded in regulating the fiery flow, and in a few minutes the casting was done; 40,000 lbs of iron had been poured, and an anvil weighing 35,000 lbs. would be dug out of the sand in a few days, think of that ye sons of Vulcan! an anvil 17½ tons weight; his must be a brawny arm that wields the hammer. The anvil is for the rolling works of the Great Western—of this more, anon.

FIRE.

A fire broke out in Retherd & Bros. old Carriage Factory, near Lundy's Distillery, on Monday night last. The Fire Companies were on the ground in good time but from the amount of dried lumber inside the buildings it was impossible for them to stay the flames.—Messrs J. & T. Douglas had a number of valuable carriages in one of the buildings which were all consumed, but we believe were covered by insurance. There is no doubt that the fire was the work of an incendiary.

THE CONGER MONUMENT.—A meeting was held in the Town Hall on Tuesday evening last, for the purpose of erecting a monument to the late W. S. Conger Esq., when a committee was appointed to carry out the arrangements, the subscription lists are now in their hands, it is hoped that they will be filled without delay. The subscriptions are not intended to be large. It will be about the sum, so that every one may have an opportunity of contributing to the movement. In another column will be found a letter from the Secretary of the committee.

M. NORRIS advertises in to-days issue, a large addition to his former stock of Groceries and provisions; we believe he sells at moderate prices.

On Tuesday evening last the members of the Fire Company met for the laudable purpose of opening their new Hall and Engine House which ceremony, we are happy to say, was evidently performed to the satisfaction of all concerned. After the usual monthly business had been transacted, the Firemen sat down to an impromptu supper, which, with toasts and songs and neat speeches, all possible honor was done to the occasion and a very pleasant evening passed. The Hall is very tastefully and comfortably furnished, and will, we are sure, amply answer the purpose for which it was intended. We must congratulate the members of the Fire Company upon having at last a place to hold their meetings and a house in which they can keep their engine without the danger of having it converted into a block of ice

A NEAT OPERATION.—While Miss Josie Spencer was riding down Broadway in a fourth avenue stage yesterday a woman all aglow with fashion got in, and as she sat down, threw her multitudinous skirts and cloaks over the lady above mentioned. Within half a mile, the mass of skirts got out, and five minutes afterwards, Miss S. found that the innocent female had slipped her hand under her dress, cut her pocket with a spring knife (in a ring, and abstracted her patrimonie, which contained a sum of money not to be despised in these days. Ladies riding in stages or cars should look out for the female thieves. They are so overcome with dress and good behaviour, that the most innocent may be deceived. Let every lady who rides in a stage or car secure a corner, if possible, and place her cavalier between her and the rabble. If she cannot do this, let her carry her portmonnaie in her hand. Pockets are invitations to theft.—N. Y. Tribune.

FRENCH MAP OF EUROPE IN 1866.—This map is headed "Europe in 1866," and is on the basis of nationalities. First comes the great Scandinavian monarchy, composed of Sweden, Norway, and Finland, with the Gulf of Finland, Lakes Ladoga and Onega, and the White Sea, for boundaries between it and Russia. Denmark is completely absorbed in the new German monarchy, of which Berlin is the capital; and the kingdom of Poland, extending from the Baltic to the Black Sea, has Germany, the Slave and the Greek empires on the west and south, with the Carpathians and the Pruth as its frontiers. Of the Slave empire Prague is still the capital, whilst Vienna falls down to a provincial city. Italy comprises the Roman States, Venetia and Corsica. Portugal is swallowed up by Spain, to which Gibraltar is restored; and France as a matter of course, takes in the Rhenish Provinces, with the Rhine for its frontier.—Paris Times Cor.

A young married lady travelling a few days since from New York to Syracuse, and suffering from consumption, had been laid carefully on a pillow in the cars by her husband, while her little girl remained by her side. At Little Falls she fell asleep, and the child commenced tossing her, saying mamma is sleeping. A passenger, however, noticed the peculiar whiteness of her lips, and, on looking closely at her, discovered that she was dead.

....Great excitement was aroused throughout Northern Ohio by the murder a few days ago of James Ward, Esq., proprietor of the Falcon Iron Worksat Niles, Ohio, and one of the wealthiest and most influential residents of that section. The murderers, Frank Robbins, fled to Canada, and was arrested on Sunday by police officers from Cleveland and Buffalo, at Welland, and lodged in Welland gaol, there to wait a requisition from the Governor of Ohio for his surrender. A reward of $6,000 had been offered for his apprehension.

The colored gentleman returned to London yesterday, glad to get clear of the yankee bloodsuckers. He looks extremely well, and nothing the worse for the hardships he has undergone. In a few weeks it is his intention to deliver a lecture here on his trials and sufferings during his brief tour of the States, a description of his sale, &c., which we doubt not will prove interesting.—London Prototype.

....We regret to learn, that on Tuesday night last, the Court House and Gaol at St. Scholastique, were burned to the ground. It was about midnight, that the flames were first discovered, and all efforts to arrest them were ineffectual. The documents and records in the Prothonotary's and Clerk's Offices were saved. Unfortunately, three prisoners of the name of Becher, (the mother and two daughters) who were confined in the upper story of the Gaol, became the victims of this disastrous fire. Four other prisoners were saved; the gaoler and his family also escaped but with a great deal of difficulty. The buildings were insured in the Royal Insurance Company for £3,000. The origin of the fire is unknown.

....The Leader states that Toronto was visited by a heavy squall of wind on the 31st ult. A boat about the middle of the bay, containing two young men, was capsized. A Mr. John Clendinning, in company with three other men, immediately pushed off in a boat, but had not proceeded far till two of his companions, owing to the roughness of the bay, refused to proceed to the rescue of the unlucky fellows who were seen clinging to the boat. Mr. Clendinning had consequently to return for another crew, whereas man named Tragan at once volunteered to accompany him. They then pushed off a second time as rapidly as possible, the wind still raging, and the waves breaking over the boat, completely drenching them. In the meantime Mr. Tinning, who, it may be remembered, has saved several lives upon several occasions, started from the foot of York street, and made desperate efforts to reach the men, in company with a crew who had nobly volunteered to accompany him. The race was very exciting between his boat and that of Clendinning. The latter, however, being nearer to the accident when it occurred, succeeded in reaching the parties a short time in advance of Mr. Tinning. The men were found clinging on the upturned bottom of the boat. They were transferred to Mr. Clendinning's boat and conveyed ashore, not much the worse for their ducking.

ACCIDENT ON THE DELHI. RAILWAY.—On Wednesday last a fatal accident happened at the now too well known Beloeil Bridge. Whilst the No. 1 passenger train was crossing the Drawbridge over the River Richelieu, three gentlemen viz: Mr. Thomas Smith of Lennoxville, Mr. H. Brown of Acton, and a gentleman named Henderson of No. 663 Eight Avenue, New York, were standing on the platform of the fourth car, when the latter passenger was struck by one of the tension-rods and knocked into the river. The deceased resided in this city a few years ago, and his brother now resides in Brockton near Toronto. The Gazette of Saturday says:—"Yesterday afternoon a telegraphic message was received at the Grand Trunk Station, Point St. Charles, stating that the body of Henderson, from New York, had been recovered. Henderson was travelling, accompanied by his little boy, nine or ten years of age, who was observed to follow his father at every step until they arrived at the St. Hyacinthe Station. There the lad fell as sep. His father went out, with some others, on the platform of a car to see the scene of the recent terrible disaster at the Richelieu crossing. He leaned over holding on by the iron rods at the side of the car, to see the place where the cars fell, and was struck in the head by one of the supporting rods of the bridge. The head is said to have been severed from the body, and death must have been almost instantaneous. The body fell into the river and was carried down by the current. The train was stopped but the body could not be found until yesterday afternoon. The boy was entirely ignorant of the fate of his father, and on awakening and missing him from his side his grief was inconsolable. He was told at length that his father had been left behind and would come by the next train. This somewhat soothed his distressed mind and he was brought to the city. The railway authorities telegraphed to the friends of the deceased the unwelcome of his death, and informed them that the boy would be taken care of until some one should arrive from New York for him."

LARGE GOLD FIND IN THE CHAUDIERE MINES.—A gentleman, named D. M. Tuck, who arrived at the Russell House last night from the Chaudiere gold mines, has with him two splendid pieces of gold, the one weighing 12 ounces, 7 pennyweights and 19 grains. These pieces were not of his own finding, but were bought of a teamster who found them on the Gilbert stream. Mr. Tuck is agent for the New York and Du Loup Gold Mining Company.—Quebec Mercury, 3rd.

NEW WHEAT.—The new wheat is already making its appearance in the market.—Messrs. T. & G. Paton purchased a small quantity on Saturday last, at 92c. Since then several farmers have taken grists of this year's growth to the mill, and in every case the sample is good.—Ontario Observer 4th.

ACCIDENTS AT SEA.

Mr. A. Barnes, of Halifax, lately read before the Royal Scottish Society of Arts, a paper "On a Method of Preventing the Fearful and Frequent Occurrence of Steamers Running Down Sailing Vessels at Sea." Mr. Barnes's plan proposes to apply electricity and this it seems to observe the law which the Creator ordained.

The instrument consists of three pointer dials or boards of the steerage—one in the captain's cabin, another in the steering-room, and the third on the bridge where the chief of the watch has to pass during his term of duty. These electro magnets are made attractive or repulsive by the motion of a lever held and moved by the lookout ahead. The [illegible] of the magnetance is twofold. The man in the bows, whose duty is to look out ahead, has also the other duty to perform of moving this lever from starboard to ahead and port. If he moves this lever the needle on these dials, subject to his motion, and indicate not only the position of the lever, but that he has duly and correctly performed his duty. Should any of the three dials will be motionless. Thus, a complete check is kept on the watch. These electro magnets are rendered sensitive by a focused battery, and give responsive signals as he moves from starboard to ahead and port. The second part of Mr. Barnes's invention is the detection of the presence of ice. This he does by having a large pile of plates of bismuth and antimony placed immediately below the keeper of the steamer. This instrument is called Melloni's thermo-electric pile, and gives of currents of electricity by the difference of the temperatures of the two ends—thus the cool end, the most is warmer than the one exposed to the cold air coming from the footway, or, rather more philosophically speaking, the pile is giving off no much heat to the iceberg, and so the current of electricity is made. Mr. Barnes connects this very sensitive pile with a coil connected to the lever, which the watchman or lookout has in his hand. If, then, an iceberg is on the starboard side of the vessel, an electric current is at once obtained by the difference of the temperature; and so sensitive is the pile that, to give the readers some idea of it, the pile can divide one degree of the ordinary thermometer of Fahrenheit into 1000 parts. The third part of the instrument is the galvanometer, which receives and registers the difference of the temperature of the air between the three points port, ahead, and starboard. This galvanometer by the deflection of a needle, shows the difference of the temperature through the various angles which the watchman moves the lever and the pile. Should an iceberg be on the starboard bow, the needle is immediately deflected, and makes contact by means of masonry with a second battery, which rings three bells in the captain's cabin, the steering room, and on the bridge. If the danger be imminent, and the iceberg very near, a gun charged with a peculiar fuse inserted in the breech is discharged, awaking all to the sense of the danger. If the helm be rang when the direction indicated is at starboard, it shows that the helm must be put so as to go to port; if at port, to starboard; and if ahead, reverse the engines. By this simple instrument, which the inventor believes will not cost more than £50, many valuable ships and lives, we hope, will be saved. A committee of the Royal Scottish Society of Arts have given a most favorable report on the instrument, which has twice been shown in action, and guns fired by means of a pound of ice.

FOURTEEN MEN MURDERED AT BUTE INLET, BRITISH COLUMBIA.—The steamer Emily Harris has arrived from Nanaimo. She brings three men as passengers, who are the sole survivors of Waddington's party of seventeen workmen, the remaining four-teen having been massacred by Chilliocotenluians who had been hired to pack for them. The savages commenced the attack by murdering Smith, the ferryman, and robbing the house. On the same night they started up to the camp where the seventeen men were sleeping, and commenced an indiscriminate attack on them with knives, guns, tomahawks and axes, slaughtering fourteen out of the seventeen. The rescuers, not content with depriving the poor fellows of life, hacked and mutilated the bodies in a most shocking manner. An Indian from Bute Inlet, who was with the party, and the three survivors whites, managed to escape in the darkness. Two of the whites are wounded, and are on board the Emily Harris. The news is of a most dreadful character, and its promulgation has raised a feeling of alarm among all the settlers in the outlying districts. The Indian who escaped says that he concealed himself in the vicinity of the camp until the next morning, and saw all the bodies. The heads of some had been hacked off; others were ripped open, and the fiends, in more than one instance, had quartered the bodies of their victims. Among the murderers the following natives of Southard, viz: James Campbell, Robert Pollocky, Alex. Millan, and George Smith.—Victoria Chronicle, May 21.

Compound

Liquid Cooler & Heater!

PATENTED 1863.

The Subscriber has obtained a Patent for an Upright Rectangular Tubular Cooler and Heater, by which he is enabled to furnish the Brewers of Canada, with a Cooler capable of cooling Beer directly from the boiler, at the rate of from 8 to 100 gallons per minute, entirely doing away with the old fashioned Worm Cooler. Brewers by the use of my Cooler are enabled to brew through the hottest weather without the aid of ice, thereby saving a large portion of their beer product. The Apparatus is of so simple a construction and occupies such a small space, that they can be furnished for a very small price, enabling every Brewer to possess one. The price is according to size.

I am also prepared to apply them to Steam Engines as a heater for one fourth the price of any patent, now in use. It will heat double the quantity of water that can without steam that is required to feed the boiler, thereby saving one half the fuel.

All orders addressed to H. Calcutt, Peterboro', will be promptly attended to.

TO THE ELECTORS

OF THE COUNTY OF PETERBOROUGH.

GENTLEMEN,—

The lamented demise of the late member for this County, again calls upon you to exercise the privilege of electing another to represent you in the Legislative Assembly of the Province.

I have been requested by many to offer myself as a candidate at the forthcoming election, and under circumstances which have induced me to place my services at your disposal during the present Parliament.

The course lately pursued by our leading statesmen, and the combination of the political parties of the Province, call for a suspension of partizan contention, urge to cordial co-operation, and would render inapplicable, principles or comparisons as to their past respective merits or demerits.

I apprehend that any man at present offering himself for the suffrages of the electors, who chiefly to confine himself to the expression of his opinions relative to the political combination entered into with a view to certain constitutional changes.

Were this combination formed under ordinary circumstances, or for ordinary purposes, the wisdom and expediency of it might justly be called in question; but considering that it was formed under circumstances fraught with danger to the United Province, and for the special object of remedying evils of a political nature, it merits our highest approbation—and I believe, must tend to raise in the public estimation the character of all concerned in it.

I have no further appeal; and should the forthcoming election result favorably to myself, I am prepared to give the present administration my cordial support in carrying out the important objects for which it was formed.

That so good a prospect is before us of being able, peaceably, to settle difficulties of no ordinary character, is matter for devout thankfulness; especially when we regard the disturbed condition of the world generally, and of this Continent, in particular; and it should be the prayer of every one who recognizes an overruling Providence in the affairs of mankind nations, that God's blessing may be vouchsafed, in order to perfect what has been so well begun—and permanently establishing peace and justice in this portion of the dominions of Her Majesty our Gracious Sovereign.

There are, in the matters of general and abiding importance that will exist and call for special notice, whatever may be the issue of present contingencies. They are: our Militia and Defences, our Finances, and the Municipal Laws thereof.

As regards the first of these, my opinions will be given without reserve. I have only to reiterate my great dissatisfaction that matters connected therewith, and complicated in their nature, have been, generally committed to the vagaries of inexperience and consequent inexperience. While glad to see the Militia Bill placed in the right direction, I hope the time is far distant when a system will be adopted which will afford increased and highly efficient military instruction to our Militia, and yet be unburthensome with regard to cost, and adapted to our circumstances.

The subject of our finances has been one of much anxiety to every thinking man, and I unhesitatingly support every wise measure for regulating our expenditure according to the means and resources of the Province; but I am not in favor of that false spirit of economization, which requires that public disbursements should be kept strictly under Provincial control.

The management of this Province is a question that must necessarily engage much of the attention of the Member for this County. I think we have many reasons to expect that a more liberal system will be adopted than has hitherto prevailed; and that by united effort on the part of all interested, we may secure better communication with the back country, and thereby greatly to more speedy settlement. I have undertaken a matter of importance in connection with this subject, which will require my presence at Quebec next week, and circumstances alone can determine the course I shall be called upon to pursue as regards the business of the County.

I take this opportunity of thanking very cordially those who have, without solicitation and very early, tendered me their support. I am not unmindful of their good will, nor to the responsibilities that it may entail upon me.

I am, Gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,

P. W. HAULTAIN.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE

TRENT DIVISION

GENTLEMEN,

An Election will take place in September or October next, when you will be called upon to choose a Member to represent the Trent Division.

Having been elected by your confidence in 1858 to fill up the unexpired time occasioned by the decease of the late Hon. E. Murney, and the resignation of the Hon. Sidney Smith, I have during the past year devoted as much of my time as it was possible for me to do in attending the two Sessions of Parliament, and also in attending to the requests of such of the constituents as have seen fit to honor me with their land and other matters, not immediately connected with Parliamentary duties.

We are about beginning a new era in the history of the politics of our country. The present move is the formation of a Ministry who pledge themselves to bury the feuds of the past, and to work together for the general good of the country, by bringing such measures before the next Session of Parliament as will tend to a final settlement of the sectional difficulties between Upper and Lower Canada, demands our serious consideration.

I may be permitted to state that I fully accord to them a fair trial, and whether in or out of Parliament, to assist by every means in my power the consummation of so desirable an object; trusting that Upper Canada may receive that which she is justly entitled to, and that both Provinces will be greatly benefitted by the change.

I have concluded from the numerous personal requests, as also by letters from many parts of the Division, to again place myself at the disposal of the Electors, and if again honored with your confidence, to discharge the trust committed to me in as satisfactory a manner as possible.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,

Yours &c. &c.

THE SELF-EMPTYING

WATER-DRAWER.

THE undersigned, while thanking the public in general for the liberal patronage they have bestowed on him since his commencement in business, begs to state that he continues to manufacture his celebrated

PATENT WATER-DRAWER!

AT BLYTHE MILLS.

You must remember that by buying one of my Water-drawers, you get your water pure, which you cannot do by a suction Pump. I warrant them NOT TO FREEZE, and to stand as long if not longer, than any Pump; and, besides, you save over fifty per cent. I can sell them cheaper than any Pump-maker in Canada! If anything goes astray by fair play within one year from the time of purchase, I bind myself to re-place it; so you cannot be deceived. Now, any one who is in need of a Pump would do well to get one of my Water-drawers at once. I have two teams out at all times to deliver them, and persons residing at a distance will receive prompt attention by sending a letter to the undersigned
